It is also my painful durfito record my deep regret at the loss of a most valuable Officer, Maj. Crommelin, C.B., of the let Lt. Cavairy, who died of wounds received when nobly leading his corps in support of the 4th Righade of Induiry.

Your Lordship is aware that I had collected a strong force in Bundlecund, under his). Gen, J. Grey, C.B., to co-operate with mer, and that both corps crossed the Scindian frootiers, from the not the each of the country on the basard of a coural action.

anips stensions attempts to maintain those friendly relations which had hisherto related believen the two Governments were featiless, and that the Mahratta Arsty, the ruling power, appeared determined to rest the fate of their country on the bazard of a general action, I instructed Maj.-Gan. Groy, with the troops under his command, to push on an rapidly as practicable to Punnar, 19 miles south west of Guellor—thus plecing the Mahratta Army to repid or attack these two columns. They adopted the latter alternative, and, under Divine guidance, the consequence—has been must decisive and honourable to the British arms.

I beg now to inclose Maj.-Gan. Groy's report, detailing his novements and operations, which were as areditable to this incritorious Officer, as the result has proved highly honourable to the troops he had under his command, and I beg carriedly in the recommendations of Maj.-Gan. Groy's it will be a some the conduct, and to the recommendations of Maj.-Gan. Groy's it will be a some the conduct, and to the recommendations of Maj.-Gan. Brigadier Gowan atrongly recommends Capt. Macdonald, Dep.-Assat.-Adjutant. General of Artillery.

Although it was not their good fortune to home into action, I feel it due to Brigadier Tennar, and the Officers and men of the Yout Artillery, to express my thanks for the great exections they made to bring up the heavy ordinance, which alone was prevented from opening on Maharajacor by the rapidity of the movement of the attachting colaman, and from the action having commenced earlier than I expected. My thanks are likewhen they protected and brought forward the immense train of blurbe, provisions, and baggage, which accompanied the Army over an great an extent of the extensy's country.

I have thus, my Lord, attempted to detail a series of movements, many of which came ander your Lordship's observation. It now becomes my dusy, as Commender-in-Chief of this Army, to do justice to those guident men, who I feel I om one selectionally assure your Lordship merit my warmest approbation; and although it fell to the lot of some—as in all actions it must—to be more prominently forward than others, yes I am proud to say I found in all arms the most animated enthanteem, and led their respective do Brig. Alth. —From the disposition which you have always extraend to insert in the Naval & Military Gasette plain matters of facts connected with the Service, I beg to annex a statement of the length of service of sighty-five Officers of the Royal Marines, at present cowing.

I think, after a perusal of the statement, it must appear to every supersimized mind that the time has arrived when nothing short of a very auturative restrement one to every unpraisedised mind that the time has arrived when nothing short of a very extensive retirement one benefit the old Officers, and raise the corps to that efficiency which the nature of its pervious requires it should esempy which the nature of the services requires it should be. The more filling up of some half-dozen vacancies at present on the Commandants' and Lieutenant-Colonels' Liets, would avail that little. The Captains are the great authorous, as it will be seen that there are no fewer than sighty-five, the senior of whem has been forty-one and the junior thirty years in the corps.

In the Royal Artillery, four Lieutenant-Colonels and four Captains are allowed to retire on full-pay annually. In the Marines, not one is allowed that book,—I am, one., A SUBSORINER.

Corporal T. Rills sworn—I was in the barrack-room, where the prisoner'and I siece, when he came in last night. He had been at the frheater. Rome of the one acked him what of clock it was, and he replied, "shout half-past 11." It was considerably later. Prisoner soon after went to had. He made no noise at the time. I was anish to by the deceased, Sergi. Dodd, some hours after, to get up and see if the prisoner was drunk, and if I found him so to convey him to the grard-house. He was making a noise in his sleep—grouning, I think. Some of the men awake prisoner, the police convey him to the grard-house. He get up after grown and went out later the presence, same back in a minute of two, and then returned to bed. After the men got up in the morning, I heard the prisoner may to deceased that her get up after, from five to ten minutes, heard the separe of a Brelock, and furning round saw Bodd stretched upon the ground, and the prisoner with his own masket in his hands. Prisoner at once and, iteralized him harrishy. I can't form an opinion as to whether fear of being reported for having overstayed his passe at the theatre on the presence, and the green man have of itself him harrishy.

Ann Dodd, widow of the deceased of respectable-leaking young woman, a husband ordered Corporal Ellin to get up and see what was wrong with the man, and if he found him drank to confine him. He soon became quiet. He rose a few minutes after, went into the passage, and thee returned to hed. Home of the men said prisoner had been troubled with the night-mare. When he rose in the morning, Dodd remarked, in a joiting manner, that he had never heard of each a night-mare as baunted that room-he thought it must be "home-mare." Home after the Others in returning from the theater must be reported. Prisoner heard this. He spolugied to dereased for the annoyanes of the previous night. The intier said nothing in reply. I was sitting sewing when I heard a shot fixed, and saw my husband full. The prisoner and claimed, "He's finished out for you now." I want to lift up my husband, but grew faint. I then ashed some of the men to assist the, but not one of them came. On the contrary, four or five of them ansered and laughbed. I caught the prisoner by the shoulder, and asked him what Dodd had done to him that he should shoot him? "Do what!" he replied, contemptiously, as if he would treat me in the same manner. Beatty hated my husband because took the prisoner way. Thinks Cumming knew of the act fatentied, as he stood class by prisoner. My husband turned as if to apeak to me, but death was upon him.

Bergt. Robinson proved the infecling conduct of the men in the room, and that he had examined the prisoner's farelook, and "found the barrel quite warm, and the old cap on the nighte.—Borgt, Hogan proved servicing prisoner's pouch and percussion any but, and finding the one a round of ball entridge, and the other a one deficient. Instrum Sanvicz Insperiorious.— The 13th annual meeting of the members of this institution was held on Saturday to receive the report of the council and to elect officers for the ensuing year. Ceptain Sanyth, R.N., (in the absence of Lord Prodhes,) was called to the chair. From the report of the council it appeared that the funded property of the institution assesses to $20th in the Three per Cent. Consols, $60th, of stock hering been purchased during the past year. The number of members reported at the last annual meeting was 4142, since which 155 had been admitted; deaths, 127; withdrawals, 75; which reduced the present number to 4095. The estimated income for the estimate present annual set at 1800t. The arranditure for the water would not access 1230f. The expenditure for the year would not exceed 1239.

The extendit had expended 237. in the purchase of standard books, and the library had every year become more valuable. Amongst the donations to the Museum were a surious collection of Chinese arms and implements, presented by Commodore Hall, R. N., late of Nonesis; and three valuable models of fortifications, contributed by Mr. Lane Fox. The council strongly recomminded the expediency of ferming a collection of arms of all mations, offensive and defensive, including those of all nations, offensive and defensive, including those of antiquity, as well as those of modern invention. Also, of precuring medels of military works, and of naval and military machines used in warfare in past and present times a together with scientific instruments, books, and documents relating to naval and military subjects. The Report having been adopted, the following Officers were elected Members of the Cousell in place of those going out by retation:—Capt. Grove, R.N., Dr. Forbes, K.C.H., Gapt. Successly, R.N., Major-Gen. Taylor, Lieut.-Col. Columbana, R.A., Dr. R. Feikin, Cant. Darline, R.N. Col. Colqueboun, R.A., Dr. R. Felkin, Cept. Darling, R.N., Lieut. Blackmere, R.N. The gallant Chairman congratu-lated the meeting on the prosperous and efficient etate of the Institution. It was gratifying to find the members of both Services thus united for the advancement of science. It was only by means of an institution of that character that the merit of individual skill and ingenuity could be brought into practical operation. A few years back, science was but coldly looked upon in the Navy; indeed, a Flag Officer had once said, "Let us have nothing to do with that legardemain" (laughter); but in after times the value of scientific discourage or anilable of contraction. of sole ntide discovery, as applicable to warfare, was universalir admitted.

It is, therefore, difficult to assertain the truth in the midst of so much contradiction. The report of certain superior Officers having been arrested has been contradicted, but there exists no doubt of the fact of a number of non-mitted to the prison of the Abbays. It is said that the conspirators had confederates in other regiments. Sin,—It is insuentable to observe the projudice and party-feeling which exist in the breasts of British Navel Officers with respect to ship-building. Such has his own fevourist theories, and the most unfair statements are set affect respecting all who differ from them. This was strikingly examplified on a late avecalon. Scarcely had the Albion set sail, when a paragraph appeared in the Newspapers headed "The Albion," describing her as a total failure. The writer's sugarness to deep a ship that sould not have been tried, defeated his papeare. Whatever might be her morits or demerits, it was only too avident that the writer's enginees to deep a saily too avident that the writer's enginees to deep a saily too avident that the writer of that paragraph was a most houtile and partial judge. Rin,—I willness proceed to reply to "A." as regards the Warspile and her close. I much wonder "A." is not aware that when a line-of-battle ship, the always born a most excellent observate as a fast sailer and fine sectors. most excellent character as a first satier and fine sea-boot, and always sarried her armament well. I never heard her other than highly spoken of, and a relation of mine was on the last station with her when she bore a flag for the last time as a stip of the line, and the reason why she was retired was her very defective state, particularly of appear works (which I can attent, having seen her in duck for inspection and report); this, added to the high character she always bore previously, very wisely induced the Adjoiralty to rance her, thus keeping a flue model in a splendid frigate. Now let "R." att. her late Captain, Lord John 'Hay, and any, or all her Officies, her character. I know it from them, and a finer frigate never went to can. She satis very fast, works well, and carries an armament of the heaviest kind with case; in fact who is fust such a ship as England's Navy may justly be proud of. Done "R." know what the Yackeen the upto I accuman append his open and swore she was "a ternation heavy Britisher inst, was at New York? or how Brother Jenathan opened his eyes and swore she was "a ternation heavy Britisher that, almost Amerikiah. I great that's only our Jadepowience (a justed eigisty, 250 tota, and 62 gans) could flog that hig British eas serpent to the tame of Yauker decide dundy." Now this very Jadepowdence was at Spithond four years ago, when I more attentish inspected her twos page is siveny anough, and heavy enough in all conscience, thering the sesuating of our 50; her arianant was some yeard of 50 long 35s of 50 out, on her appear dark, with a crow of 600 meter; but as to any peak qualifies, Warspile, and all our reason, are infinitely her separator, both in uniting, working, and the height of their main-dark gaus from the water; here were only 6 feet 8 inches from the water, mater; here were only 6 feet & tochen from the water, deger; here were only 9 lest a totale from the water, here then some of our line-af-bettle ships; she worked heavily, and in a trial of salling with M.M.R. "E." appears so have formed a very low and erroneous opinion of Barhom; now I know from a friend who served in her in the West Indige, that she was as fine a frigate of her glass an ever hore England's proud flag, and under all circumstances this was her chardoner. It is not a little singular, that of the very trial "E." aponts upon in 1831. I happen to know something, as I had a brother in it; most crue is it that the trial shes very decisive in favour of Pantaleon who then proved her admirable qualities as the Duke of Portland's yeals. The than bounded her gallant constructor's well deserted present fame; poor wretched Charphile was at androf trial (four we six hours) hall down so isometed and literally buried, amotheted. Cursoon sees meet to Pantalsim (the black ship as she was termed), but what was this Coronous Why, a rassed Si-que frigate, (a close of equal "E." evidently holds cheep,) and she and all her class have proved themselves admirable hillers and had be well, but her proved themselves admirable billers and aptendid them-ef-war, very superior to any correctes in the weric! In the above trial Berham behaved remerkably well, but her selling qualities at that period were not nearly what they afterwards proved when Copt. Cory sommanded her in the Mediterranean, where the acquitted herself so will in many trible with that superb frigure Foresan, built by Sir William Symonds, whose little brig had so gallently horse off the pales from her more powerful acts goniets. SATURDAY, MARCH 9, 1844.

THE Debates on the Army Estimates amply prove that there is a greater degree of attention paid to the interests of the Services, even in the House of Commons, than formerly; and that in spite of such gentlemen as Mr. Williams, and a very few more, the necessity of keeping up a sufficient force, and fairly consulting the good of our soldiers, is admitted by men of all parties in the State. The two speeches which have been read with great satisfaction by the Army-and we may say by the public also -are those of Sir Henry Hardings and Captain Layard,

A more triumphant case was never made out than Sir Henry Hardinge's. He proved that the numbers proposed for 1844 were barely adequate for the requisite reliefs. He nobly laid before the House the hardship of keeping regiments twenty-one and twenty-two years in India, and instanced the 13th and 55th Regiments. The whole tenor of Sir Henry's speech leads us to look for great and lasting benefits to the Services; and, among others, we joyfully hall the prospect of enlistment for limited service, and more liberal construction of orders regulating allowances to the Officers and men. 'On the subject of Pensions the language was guarded, but it was easy to perceive that some more liberal provision was in contemplation. The Bounty to the Recruit me feel satisfied, will be made at least sufficient to cover the price of his first equipment, and secure him from debt at the outset of his career.

We cannot, by any expressions of ours, convey to Captain Layard, on the part of the Army, the praise due for the pertinent and judicious line followed by him in advocating many benevolent and just measures for the good of the Service. Sir Henry Hardinge, in the manly and kindred spirit of a soldier, thanked Captain Layard; and we may with truth, in this instance, say :---" Principious placuleus viris hand ultima laus est."

We cannot dismiss this topic without noticing Lord Howick's remarks. We rejolee to see His Lordship retaining a strong interest in the good of those over whose affairs he exercised so beneficial a control when Secretary at War; and we heartily; hope that his observations on the propriety of the Guards taking a foreign tour of duty, and an increase of the Royal Marines, may meet the attention they merit. We are not prepared to support his Lordship on the change in the mode of provisioning the troops, while we admit and praise the benefits he conferred on the soldiers, by his own excellent arrangements when in office.

There are many points on which we could dilate, but as all our readers will have read, or will read, the debates, we feel less the necessity of entering into a longer consideration of the subjects discussed—the nature of which merits the notice of every Officer and soldier in Her Majesty's 'Army.

In our "Gusette" of last week we mentioned, in reference to the disallowance of coals and candles to married Officers of the Army, "That this obnoxious regulation would be financhistely resoluted as soon as it was properly brought under the notice of the present Commander-in-Chief, the present Master-General of the Ordnance, and Secretary at War;" and we have now great pleasure in being enabled to congratulate the Bervice at large, at our words being so soon verified, as, from what passed in the House of Commons, on Sir Henry Hardinge's moving the Army Resignates, that Officer distinctly stated, in answer to Captain Layard, that, "in Inture, coals and candles would be allowed to married Officers, although not residing in barracks." Arrangements are now in progress bistersen the Departments, and we might take could for our exertions in the matter.

Tun orime of desertion in the Army has of late years so enormously increased, that those who know little of the Service fancy that the soldier is driven to commit the offence by the severity of discipline. Such is not the fact. The chief cause of descrition, we feel persuaded, is found in the wretched state of debt in which every Infantry recruit is placed, by the purchase of the equipment out of his bounty as far as it goes, and an advance of his pay from his Captain: to liquidate which he is put under daily stoppages, leaving him, at a time he most needs it, without the means of procuring, after a hard day's drill, a morsel of chaese and a gless of beer for his supper. Briefly-here is the cause. The remedy is in the hands of the Secretaryat-War.

Tun Committee on Military Prisons, Major-General Earl Cathourt (President); Colonel Grant, Granedier Guards; Colonel Godwin, and Major Jebb, this week rommenced their sittings, and several Officers have been summoned to give evidence. The object, we understand, is to establish Prisons in particular districts throughout the United Kingdom, for the sole oustedy of Military oulprits.

Tax attention of the public has been drawn to the hardthip of not providing conveyances for the women and children of soldiers when proceeding by railway. This was happily noticed in the debate on the Army Estimates. and we have good reason for believing that an order will soon be issued making some provision for the conveyance, in all cases, of the soldier's family.

THE Despatches and Correspondence, which occupy so much of our limited space, fully describe the recent events in India, and the series of brilliant Military operations and successes of Her Majesty's troops, and those of the Hongurable Company's Service.

Notwithstanding the outery of the iniquity of all wars and all compresses, we are prepared to defend our interference in the affairs of Gwalior; and to shew that it was justifiable on the ground of necessity—an unmistakeable policy. We see no occasion tom' hedge ' our epinion. Our intervention was based on the Treaty of Bourhampoor, contracted with Dowlut Rao Scindenh, the predecessor of the late Maharajah, Junkojee Rao. and in which the British Government engaged to maintain a force to support and protect the head of the Gwallor State, whenever such aid should be found necessary. But for the present week we will confine ourselves to the Governor-General's explanations, as contained in a Proclamation, intimating that our forces would continue to advance in order to " effect all the just purposes of the British Government-to obtain guarantees for the future security of its own subjects, on the common frontiers of the two States—to protect the person of the Maharaja—to quell disturbances within His Highness's territories-and to chastise all who should remain in disobedience."

The battles of Maharajpoor and Runniar fairly tested the determined spirit of British soldiers, and the devotion of the Native troops, who fought at great disadvantage under the went of their heavy Artillery. "At them, my boys," was the order of Sir Hugh Gough. The gallant Chief was conspicuous for his deling gallentry, heading the columns himself, and always to be found in the thickest of the fight, obsering on the norm and leading

We annex some statistics of the late battles, and others in the East, drawn up by an Officer farthe Company's apreloc, and which will interest our Military readers :---

WE find by the Parliamentary Debates of last evening that Captain Bernal has given notice of a motion for Monday on the subject of Duelling. This we had reason to expect, after the unfortunate affair between Colone Fawcett and Mr. Munro; and we have repeatedly stated that some change or alteration should be made in Military law bearing on the question of Ducking, which at present is worse than an absurdity.

Instances have occurred where junior Officers have been brought to trial for challenging their superiors ; and last year, by Royal prerogative, two Officers were struck of the half-pay for the same offence; but in these proceedings the challenge was looked on more se an act of mutiny and insubordination; than as a crime in itself, and we believe there is no instance of any Officers of nearly similar rank having been tried under the Article of War which expressly forbide giving or receiving a challenge :--even In the out of Mr. Munro, he was never placed in arrest to be tried for duelling, but was simply superneded for being absent without leave. It is not by infringing the law that Officers run any risk, but just the reverse; instances are constantly occurring of men being dismissed the Service for acts which had they salved over by fighting a duel no notice would have been taken. We know of an instance where, from being guilty of emitting this ceremonial an Officer was dismissed the Service, by being in a certain degree teled twice for the same offence. Two young men of the same regiment had a dispute which ended by one of them kicking the other; and as a dual did not follow, they were both tried by a general Court-Martial, for unguntiementike conduct owing to some want of sufficient evidence, they were acquitted. When the proceedings were placed before George the Third, he put his pen across the name of him who had been kicked, but allowed the kicker to remain in the Army: thus proving that it is imperative on every Officer to act in direct branch of an article of war.

We take with feelings of regret to the result of the Nets spen the New Bulimeter of Friday establisht, the particulars of which were reported in our hat. The remarine of the first medicard of the Allenbridge, in reply to Captain Pecheli, who altided to the Manters philips, were shed in terms which we cannot describe atherwise then an neurocloun; and the words which the Parliamentary reportors have attributed to the gallant Admiral have given rise to one universally polated emotion in the branch of such individual of a class of man, who, whether they be considered as "seemen" versed in " the contrar parts of cennanchip," sa Officere or gentlemen, gleid to no reak in the Service for seed and ability, or for faithfulness in the discharge of their duty to their Queen and country.

The claims which we have so, long advected are not now. Our remaiks have not made or hunted-up the Masters' grievapore-they are of long standing; and we put it to the gallent Admiral, who has sectainly not identided himself as the Manters' friend, whather he has not himself known of the attempts made by Masters, over since he first want to see, to free themselves from the chain which the regulations of the Service had cost about them ? We did not take up the cause until hope seemed vanishing-until promises appeared forgotten-and when a last effort was all that remained. Had the Navel and Military Commission kneed syldeness from a few old Officers who had borne the punden and heat of the day, their simple recital of disappointed hopes and broken constitutions would have spoken trumpet-tongued in their fayour, and our appeals have been unneeded. Had their respectful patition lad to a special Commission of inquiry, we should have had little to arge; or, had the long-talked-of Admiralty labours given birth to anything of more comes quence then the mouse contained in the new regulations. our exertions would have been uposited for; but when "hope deferred" had sickened their bearts, we boldly asserted their claims, and exposed the neglect which they had met with.

To combat the speech of the gallant Admiral would be to recapitulate the facts we have before brought forward but there is one point in which lay the giet of the gallant Admiral's argument, against admitting Masters to a Lieutenant's privileges, which we cannot avoid noticing. The callent Admiral is reported to have said-"If they put Masters upon the same footing as Lieutenants, they would be doing away with that principle upon which the Service had hitberto been conducted: that principle was, that these Officers (Lieutenants we presume) should pass through a certain time of servitude before they were made Lieutenaute; but the Masters might have been in the Merchant service, and from thence go into a man-of-war." If an Officer has to learn his duty as a seamen, we cannot discern the essential distinction between his learning it in the Mercantile, or in the Royal Navy. It is quite clear that before receiving an appointment to the Royal Navy, the candidate must be thoroughly qualified, and have served a greater length of time at are then would suffice to qualify a Midshipman in the Navy to undergo the examination for a Lieutenant. This is shown by the Regulations. A Master appointed to the Navy direct from the Merchant service (am unbeard-of appointment for the last 20 or 30 years), mast have served as follows :-Two years as Master, and one year Chief Mate, or vice verse, and in all not less then seven years at sea, and be above the age of 21. A Second Master, appointed from the Merchant service, much be 19 years of age, have served six years at sea, top years as Chief Mate, or three years as inferior Mate. IC on the other hand, a young gentlemen entered the Nevy as a Voluntaer of the ed class, he must also have nerved seven years-two years of which as Besond Master, and five as Master's Assistant had Volunteer-before he could ness for a Mestar ; whereas six years' service qualifies a Midshipman, at the age of 19, to pass for a Lieut,

As an executive, or Military Officer, the Master is, in the performance of his duty; exposed as much as any Mass us wen in the thin to the beauth of service; and

Upon his coulness and ability much has always depended; and if Masters have done their duty with seel and adelity while under a hopeless rurale. tion, what might we not expect if they were cherred onwards by the hope of reward?

Intelligent and efficient Masters-and for such only we plead-do not wish, as Captain Pachell is reported to have stated, to be placed on an equality with First Lieute., but to be allowed the benefit of the seniority which the date of their Commission might give them, and to be placed immediately after the Piret Lieutenant in all ships which to not corry Committee. They do not seek to be relieved from an iota of responsibility-to lie by upon the shelf-or that my other Officer should do their duty; all they seek is, to be so situated in a ship that they can pay implicit attention to the duties which their instructions impose upon them, without being thereby uniqueted to a Court-Martial; that they should be compensated for the charge which they, more than other Officers, have placed upon them I and that after having distinguished themselves by long and duithful services, or in the face of an enemy, their brows should be laurelled by promotion and reward, as well as those of their measurate

Two salling of the Penelope for her destination Lisbon, and thence to the Court of Africa-to prove her qualities under strammand sails, when in pursuit of the pests of Christianity, the Slavers, gives a fair opportunity to submit our opinion, in her absence, on the ultimate success of her conversion from a frigate to a steemer. Some years ago we strongly urged the necossity of converting the useless old 38's into powerful and efficient steamers, at the small expense of £10,000 each frigate. Her qualities under steam and sails have not, as yet, won the good opinion of experienord Navat Officers, owing to her deep immersion when lades with souls, provisions, stores, powder, shot and guns, reedy for sea. To remady this drawback to her sees and velocity, her coal-bunks have been greatly reduced, and which has certainly-given her a lighter flotation and greater accommodation for her craw; but opinion only leads us to regret the increase of her mainment with the degreese of her souls; as, previous to this increase of mosting this ship, we submitted that her original musts were too heavy, though, as a steamer, of sunsh greater tonnegs than when a frigute, as her principal propelling power in emergency is steam, not canvas; and that the masts and yards of the old 66-gun frigate would appead sufficient canvas for her in a breeze, when atoms would not be required. In this opinion we are supported by the proved superior sailing of all our ships of war when armed on Auto. consequently sailed under reduced maste and apura.

There are many who yet doubt the possibility of this conversion succeeding, and others are positive it will not succeed. We give the observations of a Constant Reader on the subject :--- I have waited patiently to hear the sual facts of the Penelops experiment. I had seen it tried in the case of the Swift, a faith smack; the result was a total failure at a great cost. Ships built originally for sailing by fid of canvas slone, have too much rise in the floor for securing the buoyancy indispensable for steamers. But the success of the conversion of the Pensions frigate into a steemer of larger tonnege is complete, if proportionably mested. To unnecessarily overload a war steamer with masta and top-hamper, whee, parhaps, for the first few days necessarily overloaded below, is not, in our opinion, the proportional means of proving the success of the conversion of a frigate inte a steamer.

From the meeting of the Ponelope we revert to the maeting of the numerous experimental abips and result built since the peace by the several eclentific constructors, all of whom, we believe, except the late Admirabellages, were everinged of the expediency of departing from their first masting, which proved in general too beary; and those who did reduce the maste of their ressels gained a grant advantage, whereas auch constructor-still retains his own favourite principles of construction, without alteration, which proves the overnanting of their ships and .

vessels; yet, through obstinacy or vain pride, to show that their vessels could stagger under their masts and heavy press of canvas, allowed them to be sent to foreign stations, where they proved the danger and defect of overmasting, as the Admiralty experienced by the reports of the Commanding Officers.

There is one happy exception to this over-masting pride. We allude to that fine brig the Frelio, constructed by Captain Hendry, R.N., which had her disproportioned masts and spers removed after the first trial under them. and replaced by those in proportion to her construction. The consequence is, her superior sailing qualities have come into full exhibition on the South American station. by the capture of some of the fastest clipper Slagers, and beating, both by and large, an American servette. This is the brig which has the great accommedation for Officers and crew, stowage of provisions, water and stores, new interior fittings of magazine, &c., so highly approved of whenever inspected by Naval Officers.

Officers of experience and ability admit, that from the various trials in heavy gales and seas, of every class of ships and vessels composing the British Fleet, that the masting of them is not yet in proportion to their size and build, or to ensure a dependence on their carrying a press of canvas in emergency, or to bring out their best sailing qualities and dehautour under every circumstance of wind and sea.

. We have been feroured with the perusal of an extract from a private letter, recently received from an Officer, of the detechment of the Ninety-Eighth Regiment, on board the transport Fairlie, bound to Hong-Kong, narrating the diseater which compelled that vessel to put into the Manriting, fully four and a half months after leaving Portsmouth, when it might reasonably have been expected that she had nearly reached her destination.

It is hardly necessary to dwell on the intense anxiety of mind, and painful suspense, which cannot fell to be expesienced by the relatives and friends of the sufferers, until the intelligence of their safe arrival is received; but we cannot help observing, that when hundreds of excellent ships are resting in our Naval yasds, nothing can be more unpurdonable, ney, iniquitous, than the system of sending our gallant soldiers in every vessels to the most distant regions of an extended expline. The system can be justified neither on the plea of expediency nor expense, for most assuredly it could easily be shown that it can be no advantage or saving to the sountry in any point of view.

How can it possibly be expected that men who have been kept in close confinement for nine months, and expesed to every species of hardship and discomfort, ean bear up against the effects of an unhealthy climate? There is too much reason to four that the seeds of disease are sown during protracted voyages, and long before the debilitated frame is exposed to influences by which so many of our poor soldiers are hurried to an untimely grave. Ask the wislow, the fatheriess, the bereaved purent-all these can speak to the reality of the fearful mortality in our colonies.

The climate of Hong Kong would appear to be even more sickly and fatal than that of the West Iudies, whilst the troops in the latter colonies have the advantage of being relieved every three years, wa been which has not yet been extended to China. Is it not doubly imperative, then, that when our countrymen are sent to so remote a part of the world, every pressution should be taken against that which commonly impairs health. In abort, do not our interests, as well as humanity, require that proper vessels abould be provided for the conveyance (to distant regions, or, indeed, to any part of the empire) of the gallant defunders of our country?

We suggested a few weeks since that trial should be hade of a floating pier, the construction of which we the described, and which we then stated would give great facilities for disemberking troops on an enemy's coast. We did not enter very minutely into the details of our proposed structure, for descriptions of this kind, without plane or diagrams, are seldom very clearly understood; and from the nature of our publication we cannot conveniently furnish the general reeder with either; but should any Officer, or other individual having sufficient influence with the Board of Admiralty, be disposed to stand godfather to our bentling, and give our proposal a trial, we shall be, most happy to give him (gratie) the full benefit of our ideas on the subject, and to saist him its perfecting a pier, to be built on the boats of a ship of the line, by means of which, we think that in moderate weather ten thousand men might be landed in three hours on almost any accesible part of an enemy's coset.

Like all theoriets we may be too sangulue in supposing that we can so considerably abridge the time and risk that has niways heretofore been experienced in landing and reembarking man; but it is our present object to subject our theory to the test of prastice, and to have an opportunity of excertaining what amount of sea and rough usage our structure would bear. We are of opinion that from its flexible nature it might be nafely used even in such weather as would render a landing in boats utterly impracticable ; and should that, on examination, prove to be the case, we feel that we need offer to the Service no apology for having brought the subject under their notice.

While writing on this matter in a former Number, we only spoke of disembarking men ; but we may be allowed to observe, that it is on re-embarking them that the superiority of our structure would be most apparent; for then an empty boat on the beach, or alongside a rock, has to be kept affeat while the men clamber into her; and we have often seen those who fencied they had nothing to do but to shove off obliged, from the boat having grounded, to get out to enable her to be again get affect. Such an accident occurring while in front of an enemy, might cost the lives of the men covering the embarkation, and this risk, we think, would be completely avoided in such a pier as we have attempted to describe.

East India Intelligence.

Bombay, Feb. 1, 1844.—Summary.—Two victories have been fought at Gwallor, vis., Maharajpoor and Pun-mar; our loss has been severe: 141 killed, and 866 wounded. Nine Officers have been killed or died of their wounds, vis., Maj.-Gen. Churchill, Col. Sanders, Mejos Crommelin, Capts. Stewart, Magrath, and Cobban; Lts. Crommelin, Capts. Stewart, Magrath, and Cobban; Lts. Newton and Leatin; and Ensign Brey. The loss of the enemy is estimated at between 3000 and 4000 killed and wounded, with the loss of 56 pieces of artillery. The Army finder the Commander-in-Chief was about 14,000 strong, of which 3000 was Cavelry, and 40 pieces of artillery. The force opposed to this—5000 Infantry, 3000 Cavalry, and 100 guas. The wing under Gen. Grey, including the Sippres contingent, 7000 strong, including 1800 Cavalry and 18 guns; the Mathratias mustered about 12,000 with from 20 to 30 guas. The fort was immediately warwith from 20 to 30 guns. The fort was immediately sur-rendered, and the Chiefs same in and made submission. It is not our intention to compy the country, but we insist upon the maintenance of a subsidiary force, consisting of seven regiments of Infantry, with three Cavalry regiments, with Horse and Foot Artillery. These to be taken charge of by Company's Officers, solely and under our own control. The Army retires to within its own terriown control. The Army restres to within its own terri-tories immediately.—Lord Ellenborough was to start for Calcutta on 28d January. His Lordship was in the heat of the action at Maharejpoor on the 29th.-The troops in Soinds recover but alowly from their late sickness.-Puulaub remains in the same state as formerly.—We have news from China to the 28th December, but there is no-thing worth noticing.—India throughout is tranquil.

Gwallar. - The disturbances which have so long been maturing in Gwallor have at length come to a crisis, and in a manner as creditable to our Government as to our brave and wanter as created in the confederates of the new incarcerated Khangeewallah having, since his surrender, been supreme in the Court, every means have been med by them to wenn the Maharonee from the confidence which she has begun to place in our professions. Having come to the determi-nation of visiting the Governor-General in the camp at Dholepore, and having gone a part of the way, she was advised from the reports circulated by the Vakeels then in our camp, on no account to visit it, as our professions of friendship were counterfeit, seeing that a large portion of the army were on their way to the capital, and had already crossed the river. This intelligence, combined with that brought by others, tending to the same effect, overturned all the resolutions which she had lately come to. Her first step on returning to Court was to assemble all the chiefs and efficers, and the resolution was come to of opposing the further advance of our troops. With this view, Colonels Baptiste and Jacob were discoted to oppose the advance of the right wing of our army, while Col. Secondar was deputed to oppose our left. The first appearance of legitlity was shown on the part of the enemy by firing on the baggage party of Col. Steeman, and again on a reconncitring party under Col. Garden. This of enems decided the course to be pursued, and Maj. Gen. Sir J. Thackwell. with the troops under his command, was directed to make an immediate attack on the enemy's left flank, supported by those under Major-Gen. Valiant. The enemy's centre was ordered to be attacked by the troops under the command of Maj. Gen. Debals, supported by those under Brig. Wright. To the left of this, with the view of threatening the right flank of the enemy, was the 4th Brigade of Cavairy, under Col. Scott. The whole of this force, numbering 3000 Cavelry, 12,000 Infantry, Artillery, and Sappers, with 40 places of artillery, ten of which were howitzers and heavy guns, was about a mile in front of Menarpipor, by eight o'clock on the morning of the 29th of Dec. As it was found that the enemy had taken passession of the village the previous evening, some little filteration was requisite from the original disposition of the force, and General Littler's column was directed to advance from the village, white General Valiant took it in reverse, these being supported by Gengral Dennia's column, with the two light field-batteries. In doing this he was assailed with rounds of grape and shot, and having stormed the battery he entered the village, carrying everything before him. Twenty-sight guns were here taken, and so desperately was his position defended that very few of the enemy escaped. The left wing of our Army, under the command of Gen. Grey, were equally successful at Panniar, which lies at about 12 miles from Gwalior. He had been directed to at about 12 mess from Gwallor. He had need to march direct on Punniar, for the purpose of hemming in the enemy, in conjunction with the right what of our force. This, however, was frustrated, the enemy having subdivided their force so as to meet both division of ours, and a portion having taken up a position at some miles distance from our right, completely accounted by lofty distance from our right, completely accounted by lofty hills, near the village of Margore, a short distance from Punniar, where they began firing on our baggage. Brig. Harriott, with a troop of Horse Agillary under Capt. Brind, took up a position beyond the baggage, where they returned the enemy's fire; but makin, from the impassable alture of the ground, to bring them to whose quarters, they returned to the rear under a beavy stanounde. The enemy, however, having changed their pedition to one four miles on the east of Gen. Gray's camp, it was resolved immediately to attack them. This was flowed by H.M.'s 3d Buffs, with a company of Sappere and Miners, fullowed shortly afterwards by five companies of Miners, fullowed shortly afterwards by five co

Scinds.—The troops are recovering from their recent sickness, but very slowly. The 20th, on its way to Kur-raches, had about 800 sick, the 78th there had only about 80. The regiments at Sukkur had much improved; in But. The regiments at speaker and much improved i in Hydrabad they were otherwise. The 55th N.I. has been erdered to relieve the 9th N.I. at Shikapoor, an attack from the Beloochees being apprehended. Sir C. Napier was about to start on an expedition somewhere about Sakkur, and proposes taking with him H.M.'s 78th High-landers. and 86th, the 25th N.I., with Horse Artillery, and a detachment of the 2d Cavalry. He is expected to start for Hydrabad early this month. The entire force of Bombey troops in Scinde, on 12th Jan. was 9870, of whom 2890 were unfit for duty from sickness; the Scinde Horse, with the Bengal troops, amounted to between 4000 and 5000.

Madras. -Amongst the arrivals by the Hindos we observe, Colonel Fratt, Deputy Adjutant-General of H.M.'s Forces at this Presidency, in succession to Maj-Gen. Fearon. The 47th Regt. embarked at daylight on Saturday morning, the men conducting themselves in the most satisfactory and praiseworthy manner, though the beach presented the usual distressing scene on the occasion, being thronged with the weeping families of the Sepoys. The arrangements made for the embarkation of the curpe were most judicious. Flags were placed, showing which were the bosts for each particular transport, and no confusion or accident of any kind occurred. The feeling lately exhibited by a portion of the men of the 47th arose entirely through a belief that they were not to receive certain allowances to which they considered themselves entitled; and this point being adjusted, the gallant 47th at once showed themselves ready to proceed wherever their services might be required. The three transports their services might be required. The three transports sailed in company at noon on Saturday. We observe that the families of Maj. Breamer, Capt. Kennedy, and Lieut. and Quartermaster Rich, have proceeded to Kurraches. The duty at the Presidency now fails heavy on H.M.'s 57th Foot and 6th N.I., notwithstanding the withdrawal 57th Foot and 6th N.I., notwithstanding the withdrawal of many small guards from the Collector's Cutcherry and other public offices. The guard at the General Hospital is now furnished by H.M.'s 57th Foot, in consequence of the paucity of native troops. We understand that Maj.-Fearon, C.B., Dep. Adj.-Gen. of H.M.'s Forces, has taken his passage in the Lady Flora for the Cape. This old and distinguished Officer will carry with him the regrets of the Army at his departure, and the best wishes of the acciery at this Presidency of which he has been for of the society at this Presidency, of which he has been for so many years a highly valued member. We some time since stated that the 64th Bengal N.I. had positively refused to proceed to Scinde as ordered, and had, further, threatened to sheet the Commanding Officer and the Adjutant. Some of the man of this corps have, it appears, forwarded arress of a highly mutinous nature to head quarters, which has led to the confinement of several epoys of the regiment.—Madras U. S. Geneller, Jan. 11.—The following appointments of

Acting Brigadiers of Infentry are made:—Lieut.-Col. M'Laren, C.B., 16th Grensdiers, to command the 3d Brigade, v. Majer-General Valuant, acting as Quarter-master-General of Queen's troops; Lieut.-Col. Wright,

The Battles at Hingeliah.—Negotiations had been going on for some days previous to 26th Dec., 1843, on which day it was supposed the Gwalior Government would submit to all the terms imposed by the British Government.

This having hiled, on the 28th all General Officers, Officers communities helpedes and regiments, were directed to assemble at the Com.-in-Chief's tent at zoon. They did so accordingly, to resulve their instructions for the line of marsh, or for the columns of attack, should they line of march, or fer the columns of attack, should they meet apposition on the following marning, which was fully appeared. The whole of the troops were under arms before daylight on the morning of the 26th Dec., 1845, she marched from Hisgolsh, the 3d brigade of Infentry taking a direction sowerls Mangowies, the 4th brigade marching uses Mostvend, and the 5th brigade, consisting of No. 10. Li. Field Battery, the 4th Brigade of Cavalry, consisting of the 4th Lancers and 10th Lie. Cavalry, under Brigadier Scott, fogsther with H.M.'s 39th Reg. and 56th M.Li. moving upon the road to Joses. These columns all arrived at their respective positions about 8 o, clock, having marched a distance of 6 miles. We were aware the enemy were in position at no great distance, though their exact locality was not known to us. were formed in quarter-distance contiguous columns, the Artiflery and Cavelry on our left, in cultivated Saids. At Artillery and Caveley on our left, in cultivated fields. Atthis period we perceived four or five elephants coming upin the rear of Her M-jesty's 39th Regiment; to our aurprise we perceived Ledy Gough, Mrs. General Smith, Miss Gough, and Mrs. Curtis, with three European maid-servants. Lord Elienborough at this moment galloped up with a few troopers, and halted in mar of the 39th's colours; he spoke to Gen. Littler and to access Officers of the 39th in the most familiar measure. The Military spectacle of the field of battle was at this moment truly arend: Mrt.-Gen. Valiant, with his 3d Brirads of truly grand: Mej.-Gen. Valiant, with his 3d Brigade of Infantry in columns stretching far to the right; Maj.-Gen. Dennis, with the 4th Brigade, in the centre; and the 5th Erigade on the left; the 3d Brigade of Cavairy, H.M.'s 16th Lancers, let Lt. Cavairy, and Governor-General's Body-Guard, with Charley Grant's Troop of Horse Artillery, under Maj.-Gen. Thackwell, and Brig. Curston, to the extreme right of all. The Artillery all in their proper positions, as ordered.

The slephants in the rear of H.M.'s 39th Reg. towering over this position of the field of battle, soon attracted the enemy's attention; it was no longer doubtful where the enemy's position lay, and a rapid fire of five guns in succession was directed towards the centra of the 39th, immediately in resr of which was Lord Ellenborough and temmediately in rear of watch was note Entersorough and the ladies; the distance from the enumy at that period was about 1500 yards. The first few shots fell short, but in a few moments we could perceive by the elevation of the guns, that the practice of the enemy's Artillery was perfect, for several shots in aucoession bounded over 11.M.'s 39th, and close to the elephants. I had seen some service in distant climes. I marked well the firm, cool, and steady countenance of his Lordship on the first occasion of his having been exposed to firs, and the chivalrous bearing of this high-minded noblemen,—an honour to his name, an honour to India, and to the British nation, who was reluctently forced by his advisers and friends to quit this dangerous position, and proceed with the ladies to Mooreeno, which the enemy's fire bed not then opened upon.

General Littler having at length received the Chief's laconic order, 'On and at them,' directed the two regiments immediately to advance towards the esseny; the ground was difficult and heavy, which impeded much the progress of our advance; the enemy then opened a heavy and most destructive fire towards the colours of H.M.'s 37th Rog.; and as we advanced the fire became equally destructive to all parts of the line of this noble reg well supported by the 56th N.I. Throughout the advance to this battery, there was not a stone, or bank, or shrub of any kind to cover the soldiers from this heavy fire. The ateadiness, firmness, and undaunted courage of the troops, suimated by the gallant Littler, were beyond all praise. The enemy s fire was unerring; not a shot but told. When about 60 yards from the battery, H.M.'s 39th gave thom a volley, and with three British cheers rushed upon the enemy at their guas, and the brave fellows that de-fended them died by their sides.

The conflict in the village of Maharejpoor was short, but the struggle severe and desperate. It was impossible to state the strength of the enemy, as they were crowded in all directions; when broken in upon in the houses and enclosures in the village, and when even they were suppor to be subdued, the fire was kept up from these pieces by vast numbers who had concealed themselves in the little plantations and gerdens surrounding the village.

It would be invideous in the writer of this to particularize any conspicuous act of gallentry where all were equally brave against one of the most destructive free of a determined enemy, who were driven from their guns only by the bayonet. It is impossible to speak in too high terms of Maj. Gen. Littler, whose resolute and enot bravery was conspicuous throughout. He'(with his staff) was close in conspicuous throughout. Her (with his staff) was close in with the enemy's gups, receiving on this secssion a severe contesion from a grape shot on the left suite. Captain Greeves was wounded by his side, Capt. Harris was angaged in a personal conflict, and Maj. Ryan's (H.M.'s 60th) horse was wounded by a meaket ball; this shows that our railient Gen. did not easen his nestes.

In re-forming time we found that our loss had been severe both in Officers and men; our attention was then directed to a heavy cumorade on the left of the Make, rajpoor. The gullent Wright soon got his brigade formed in line again, and proceeded with a resolute and firm rajpoor. A ne guttent wright soon got the straint and firm in line again, and proceeded with a resolute and firm step to the attack of this second position, named Choundah. The distance from Maharajpoor to this new position was about a mile. The force of M.M.'s 39th Reg. and 56th N.E. had been much reduced in numbers, but the tried valour of the troops acting could be a fine of the troops acting could be a fine of the troops acting could be a fine of the troops acting this. daunt, the General acting on his own judgment in this operation. The camounds in this support devence was creat more destructive and murderous than the attack upon Mahamipoor in grape, chain, and round shot; overy discharge om well-served batteries in front and flank made a breach in our ranks and thinned them most rapidly, a gannou shot at this period mowing down three man of H.M.'s 30th, and at this period mowing down three man of E. M.'s 30th, and also a horse on which Major Ryan was riding at the General's aids. The gap in the ranks of the 39th was world. The gallant Brigadier then halted his regiment (the 39th) with an much steadiness as an the period ground, and perfected the line, and, on arriving near enough to their entrenched camp, he gave them a volley as at Maharujpeor, and dashed in upon the gams with the bayonet; the enemy flying before on this consistent, and, steadeding their gams, left their tents standing. The troops at the termination of this second contest were so exhausted by fatigue, and more particularly from thirst, under a strong ann, that they could not follow up their vistery further, having been marching and under arms since diprinted a. M., it being noon when the obtdiet of Chaundah was terminated.

The object of the writer is to afford a plain statement, And copies of the writer is to more a plant statement, mishout giving pealed to a single individual, in any subordinate rank; if it would be done in a letter like this, it would be to record the most brilliant acts of devotion and valour, of both Officers and men of 11. M. 's 38th Reg. I must, however, mention the cool and steady courage of the veteran Bray, leading in front the colours day, carrying one of the banners of the Regiment, After we supposed all opposition had ceased, four guns in a detached battery to the right were opened upon us, in a consence bettery to the right were opened upon us, with murderous grape, by a few desperate Mahratta soldiers; the Grandler pu of H.M.'s 39th, and a co of the 56th N.L., soon attacked and secured them. It is not my province to remark on this occasion upon the movements of the general field of battle; all those who movements of the general need of cattle; an inche who were not engaged or small not be engaged evineed the most enzions seel, hoping that it might be their turn next to move. My marration is simply what occurred with the two regiments of the 5th brigade, and whatever credit may be due to General Littler, he must owe chiefly to the intropidity and valour of the troops he had the good forto command on the ever-memorable and glorious

P.S.—I should have mentioned in its proper place the good service done by Capt. Grant's troops of Horse Artillery on the Cheundah position, previous to the advance of Her Mejesty's 39th Regiment.

There may be other parts of the fight connected with this brigade left out of this harried account, which, from my being throughout the day with H.M.'s 39th Reg., did not come under my immediate eye.

The Chinese War: an Account of all the Operations of the British Forces from the Commencement to the Treaty of Nanking. By Lieutenant John Ouchter-lony, F.G.S., of the Madras Engineers; late Acting Engineer at the New Settlement of Howy-Kong. With Fifty-three Illustrations, from Original Drawings by the Author. Sausters and Otley.

(Second Notice).

Corn of the great merits of this work is its entire freedom from all party feeling. Lieutenant Ouchterloop has, of source, his own opinions; but, his object not being either to attack or defend, but to sincidate, he judiciohaly contents himself with stating the opinions of others, on which he leaves the reader to form his own judgment.

We imminated our first "! Notice" of "The Chinese War" with the close of the year 1841; we now proceed to glance at what followed. The beginning of 1842 found the British forces in oulet measuration of Niagon. In to gimes at what renown. The beginning of 1902 round to the British forces in quiet peacession of Ningpo. In Centen, and its neighbourheed, miso, all remained quiet. Early in March, however, a figure and most gallent attack was made upon the English, by the Chinese, at Ningpo.

"The teleform of this attact, both in its plan and execution,

"The toleness of this attick, both in its plan and execution, ducined, as may be imagined, ducts notwishment among the British treesp, whin, from the severa and etil; recent example made of the defenders of Chin-has, may from the sense with which the furne assembled at Ye-Yao had been dispersed in January, little depocted to find the aggressive thus intropully accuracy little depocted to find the aggressive thus intropully accuracy by the Chelchang division of the imperial Army."

But the repulse was dounplate at all points:—

"And its results must have been effectual in deterring the Chinese leaders from again venturing on the lair of their terrible invaders. While on our slop set a single man had hear kilded and only a few wounded, appropriate of add of the secury had fallen, countains, of course, of their discover and heat. "Stangarged, between, from the latest lead of the secury had fallen, stangarged, between, from the latest leader against our pastion constanted exclusively of men who had never before been

Mr. Onehteriony relates the following characteristic anecdots, on the credit of an eye-witness:—

"As I was picking my way dear of the resting mass which obstructed the street, the sum, as they passed on, were matching from the dead the little parses in which the don-way of the distraint has been made; and as I capsed by one of them, a san the nearth little, who was examining the contents of side which he had just appropriated from the girdle of a militar, whose temples had been literally areased in by a shot, I heard him any, I has leak to ye! ye 'ye bila am' spint one of 'am; here 's only five,' "

Of the indomitable bravery of the Tartar soldiers, and of their lave of home and family, many striking examplifications are given in this volume.

"As the place (Chapcof afforded the first opportunity which the expedition had enjoyed of examining that remarkable eyetem of living spart from the Chierce, persend by the Tartar in all towns where they have adopted permanent randences, much interact was emilted by the investigation of the buildings legisladed in what was styled the "Tartar city." The fisceness, desperation, determined bravery, and self-devotedness of the Tertar soldiery are again strongly shown in the following peasage:—

It is evident that, dely disciplined, and supplied with modern weepons, one of the disciplined in the world might be formed from Tariar science. I had they been only upon a par with us in these respects, we should have found they take the state of the second.

The sounce of desolation and horror which occurred at Chinkeng foo, are almost too lightful and appelling to Chinkenng foo, are almost too Rightral and appeting to quote to—

"In one of the houses the hodies of seven dead and dying persons were found in one reces, Asyming a group which for instance before was perfupe unsignified. The house was settlessed in the aboile of a man of a time that and consideration, and the delicate forms and features of the histories described them as belonging to the higher order of fraters. On the shoot, caselying in vais to put food with a spool into the mouths of two young children extended on a mattron, weithing in the agonies of death, equand by the dislocation of their spines, set an old decrept man, weaping bitterly as he intend to the pissees mount and curval-sive breathings of the poor intuits, while his up wandered over the ghapity write of mortality around him.

There is much that is interesting and velemble in this volume, of which we have not been able to offer the reader even the faintest idea. The work, as we intimated in our former "Notice," is by far the most complete that has yet appeared on the subject of the war on Chine. Of its numerous illustrations, the maps and Military plane are the most important.

Ireland, Historical and Statistical. By George Lawis Smyth. Part I. Whittaker and Co. In this commencing portion of a work which, apparently, is to consist, when complete, of two octave volumes, we find no sufficient data on which to hazard our opinions as to its probable merit. However, it is very well written; the author has evidently read and studied his subject; and be han here brought together a considerable quantity of mainful statistical information. As the book is to be published at fortulghtly intervals, we shall soon have further apportunity of marking its progress.

Of our various annual volumes, this is decidedly one of the most useful, as a record of the past, and as a work of reference. A portrait of Dr. Justin Liebig, Professor of Chemistry in the University of Glessen, forms the frontiapiece. Amongst hundrade of other interesting facts, some curious particulars respecting the new discoveries which have been made in photography, will be found; especially on the Tithonotype, or art of multiplying Daguerreotypes.

CAPTAIN THOMAS GORDON, LANS OF THE BOYALS.

CAPTAIN THOMAS GORDON, LIGHT OF THE BOYALS.

This Officer died at 12, Greensking-street, Edinburgh, on 22th February, eiter a short Unasis, in the first, ninth year of his age. He contract the Army, in 1811, as English me to 28th Phot, from which he was some promoted into the Royals. He served his country three different times in the West Indies, and was four gainst in the East. He was present at many brilliant actions, including the repelies of the service at Mandelynor, Quatre-Brief, and Waterhos; to which legit speaks he had the housen of services after the policy of the Royals, on half-yay, in 1824. To the gallanty and housen characteristic of his publishes, Capt.

Gerden maited an measuremen soundness of judgment and discrimination of character. His equable temper, the slacerity of his friendship, the hindliness of his disposition, joined with a singular unobtrusiveness of manner, and deared him to a large sirely of friends and sequentations, who will long joined the remembrance of his steeling worth, and lement his premature death.

J. KOHLER'S NEW PATENT LEVERS PASENT for the shove invention, which he has applied to the CORNOPEAN, TRUM-PET, CORNETTO, TROMBONES, and PEENCH HORNS, he can now with great confidence, after an experience of five Years, in bringing the action to its present state of perfection, recommend them the her Majesty's Army and Navy, and all Professors and Amateurs.

The advantages that this Patent gives to these Instruments, are:

The advantages that this Patent gives to these Instruments, are:—

1. All the Tomes and Semitones produced by the Patent Lever are quite as perfect as the Natural Notes on the Instrument,
2. The intervale in the Diaronic and Chaomatio Scales are perfect, the compass greeter, and the must rapid and difficult passages may be performed with a precision, freedom, and fulness of tone, and comparative case to the performer.

3. Combinations in harmony, which never before could be performed at all by any Brass Instruments, may now be executed with perfect case, and Trains, Twelve instruments on this principle, case produce a merer rich and concrus effect than Twenty-four could do on the old principles. The harshness of tone in the former Brass instruments here together, produces away with, and a fet of these instruments hered together, produces military and harmonious effects never before heard.

These Instruments are now in use in Has Majert's Privare Band, Pirat Lips Guard, Royal House Guards, Garnadies Guards, Fullium Guards, Sco.

A SINCELE BOTTLE OF BETTS'S

A PATENT BRANDY may now be obtained in a perfectly genuine state. This convenient arrangement for both vendor and purchaser, and their patients security against deception, is effected by the use of BETTE'S PATENT METALLIC CAPBULE, made of pervend WOLLD METAL (not Tis Foll), which completely encloses the early summent of the bottle, and is emboased with the words "BETTE'S PATENT BRANDY, 7, RMITHFIELD BARE," the fine-simile of which is engraved on a label salized to each bottle.

In the present day it is impossible to produce anything new and useful, without architect the cupidity of imitators. Already attempts are made to mystify the identity of the original and genuine sybols, by folialing upon the public the contests of cottentaving a Tin Full covering, falsely dehominated "a neat metallic opposite." J. T. BETTS & Co. therefore deem it essential to impress upon perchasers the shouler necessity of comparing the Emboased Gapanies with the Labels, as an infallible mode of detacting fraudulent substitutions.

BETTE'S PATENT BRANDY, thus protected, may be obtained of the undermentioned Wine and Spirit Merchants, at 2s. 5d. per Bottle, Bottles included; or at 1ss. per Gallon, as heretriore, at

has gone north to inspect the ports at Amoy and Chusan.

— Several men of the Corps were yesterday (Friday afternoon), employed in deging and carting gravel from the pit between the Battery and Repository grounds to the Royal Arsenal, and two of the men, gunner and driver Rorwood, and gunner and driver Cochrane, belonging to corwood, and gunner and driver contraine, belonging to Capt. Dyaon's co., 7th Batt., having in the progress of digging gone under the bank, their operations, and the state of the ground and gravel above them, caused the whole to give way, and falling upon them they were killed almost instantaneously. Their comrades, who werepresent at the time soon got out the badies, and the medical menuate the contraints of the contraints of the contraints. were promptly on the spot, but life was totally extenct in the one care, and after two or three gaspings the other ed to exist.

CANADA .- Sec. Capt. Caddy intends going before a CAMADA.—Sec. Cept. Cedit intends going priors a Medical Board at Kingston, Cameda, with the expectation of being able to retire on heli-pay. Capt. Cator has obtained one year's leave, and proceeds to England early in March. In the event of Capt. Lethbridge's qu., 5th Batt., being relieved from their present station, Montreel, in the spring, the only changes likely to take place is Capt. Faser's co. removing from Quebec to Montreel, and the company sent out from Woolwich to remain at Danhar. The Artillary have sent been trying the Con-Quebec. The Artillery have again been trying the Congreve rockets, which has now been done the last three years in succession, and it has been found that the severe winter climate has an effect on the composition, as more than one half of the number tried always burst either in the tube or on immediately quitting it. The case was quite different with those fired in the summer, as they generally burnt well, and ranged their proper distances.

'Division Orders, Comp Choondah, Dec. 19.—Major General Littler begs to after his sincare thanks and congratulations to the 5th Brigade on the shappy termination of this day's operations. The advance to the storm of the first position of the examp at Maharejpoor, both by Her Majacay's 29th Regiment and the 5th Native infigurity, was admirable, and could not have been surpassed by any troops in the world. The noble bearing of the light Reg. through a heavy cannonate to the attack of the enemy's guns was beyond all description glerious, and the attackness of the 5th N.1, under such trying circumstances was highly creditable. The second position of the enemy in their entrenched camp at Choondah was carried under a most destructive firs, in the same noble myle by Her Majesty's 29th Reg., supported by the 5th N.1. The Major-General begs to return his best thanks to the Offenns and men of the 8th Brigade for their completous bearing throughout the day. It is also most gratifying to the Major-teneral to know that the success of the brigade at the first position was performed under the immediate observations of his Excellescy the Commandar-is-Chief.' 4 * * * * * * * 1 must tell you that Major Bray (a noble fellow) while leading the reg. observed that his gallant young son, who was carrying one of the solours, was atruck down by a grape-thot. Sir,—In the Times report of what occurred in the House of Commons on Tuesday evening, I perceive that in suseer to a question from Captain Burnal, Sir H. Hardings declared that an Officer might be kept under arrest for a longer period than eight days, nithout being

It is a lamentable thing, Sir, that of all the Military men in the flower of Commons, there was not one who knew enough about the Articles of War, to put Sir Henry right in regard to his destrine, which gives such despotic power to a Commander-in-Chief; and it is surprising, as well as lamentable, that a Secretary-at-War, being in wise an old Officer, should know no better that to make the statement imputed to Bir Henry by the Times report.

The Articles of War, Sir, as you doubtless know, declare "That no Officer or soldier who shall be put in arrest, or confinement, shall continue in his confinement ore than eight days, or until such time as a Court Martial can be conveniently assembled."

This latter proving authorises no avoidable delay, and is abviously intended rather to mest possible service exis obviously intended rather to meet possible service exigences than to authories a wanton postponement of a trial; but in the case in question, it is evident that a Court might have been assembled at once; and, indeed, Sir Henry gives the autounding reason for its not hisring been so convened, that the Commander of the Forces was veiting to try them under a sentemplated lim, thus stalling it in their case as post fasts.

It is undiless to state that no such motive sould legitise the keeping these Officers in a protracted arrest, whether it were a close out or an arrest at large.—I am de.

THE NAVY. " In answer to the spirited complaints of Captain Rous, Sir C. Napier, and other Naval authorities, it is said that the British Navy was never in a better state than now; and we believe it. The present Naval Admi- seked till long after, at the close of the examination; and nistration is, in our opinion, much better than the preceding one; it has corrected defects to which Lord Minto wa obstinately wedded, and the Service is altogether in a higher state of efficiency than at any preceding period. But this loss not meet the complaint that all is not done that should be do te to render it yet more complete, and to maintain its superiority over other nations. It must be borne in mind that the French Navy has been improving too, and improving in more than the proportion of our own, so as very much to diminish our superiority at least, and, if the te rate of advance continues, to threaten a formidable rivalry. Two objections, the good sense of which rivairy. Two objections, the good sense of which must atrike every mind, were made by Sir C. Napler and Capt. Rous-namely, the employment of aged Officers, and the appointment to steam-slips of Officers unskilled in the machinery, and who are therefore incompetent to command the Engineers, or rather, who are controlled by them, as in many cases they must be unable to dispute their opinious as to what can or cannot be done.

"You do not give us a opmmand," says Captain Rous, till we have ceased to see with our own eyes, hear with our own cars, and chew with our own teeth;" and he referred to the case of an Admiral in the command of the Mediterranean fleet, aged seventy-five. That Admiral housted his flag in the Queen, a new ship, and we believe the largest and finest in the Navy. Her sailing qualities were a matter of great interest; but when the Admiralty looked to see how she had acquitted herself on her voyage out, they found that the Admiral had never havied down his tack, had never tried his ship on a wind, though in a fine summer voyage he had had the most excellent opportunities.

The jealousies of ship-builders is another evil pointed opportunities of ship-builders is another evil pointed out by the champions of the Naval interests; and we are glad to see that Sir G. Cockburn, though concessing merit to Sir. W. Symonds, does not regard him as an unerring oracle. Captain Rous observed on this point—

"Bir W. Symonds and others hated one snother with as hatred which he could not describe (laughter), yet when a ship built by a merchant-builder was brought into competition with them, they united to prevent such persons from constructing ships for Her Majesiy's Hervice. It was well known that there were ship builders is London, Liverpoot, Bristol, and the late of Wight, as far superior to any Navab builders, and to sir W. Symonds, as Sir W. Symonds was to a common shipwright. The Admiralty had tried to humbug the House of Commons (laughter), and why? Bookse there was nobody to contradict them. But, shask God I since the peace u any gentlemen, having yaonts of their own, had shade themselves well exquainted with the subject, and would no longer be bandooxied."

"The Yacut Clabs have reason to be proud of this tribute to the usefulness of their truly menly and national pleasures. Indeed, it is remarkable that amongst the best evidence before the Shipwreek Committee is that of landsmen who have taken an interest in Nautical mat-laudemen who have taken an interest in Diautical matters, and that some of the worst is professional. ters, and that some of the worst is professional. For example, as to the loss of the Solway, Captain Chappel, R.N., thought there was a great mistake, but no neglect in the Captain's not distinguishing between the bearings on the chart and the bearings by compass, and consequently ordering a course right by chart but wrong by compass, which drove the ship on the rocks! This was not mistake but neglect. It was not that the Captain mistook compass bearings for chart bearings, but that in his disastrous order he nefor chart bearings, but that in his disastrous order he neglected the difference between the two-the difference between west and west-south-west. Who would sail with a ry careful and able Captain capable of such a mistake, as Captain Chappel insists it was? As well have a physician who, by a slip of the pen, gives you a pougen instead of a drug resembling it in name.

"The same Officer being asked by Admiral Dundas to what he attributed the loss of the Reliance and Conqueror on the French coast, replied, from mistaking CapesGris Nea for the light of Beachy Head, "they lis in the same latitude, and a man may very easily mistake them, " and with this number the Admiral seemed satisfied. There may be eyes unable to distinguish between the extraordiparily britishes, flashing light of Gris Nez and Beachy Head, but as to their lying in the same latitude, the dif-ference between them is 20', which, in so narrow a sea as the Channel, is of some little importance, and worth noting in a course.

Mr. Steward, a lundsman, who gave his evidence soon

Mr. Sieward, a lundaman, who gave his evidence soon afterwards, corrected this gross blunder—

"A witness has asted that mistakes have arisen through licenty Head being suitaken for Gris Nez; I believe the fact is, that it is through this Nex and Bungoness being mistakes, and have taken the liberty of masing a suggestion through Mr. Palmer, the chairman of the Committee, this is a lighthous were crected in mid-shannel, on the Ridge or Varn Sand, and the French authorities would reliequish the light at Gris Nez, and the light at Dungeness wealst be also relinquished, there would be no possibility of their being mistakes, and that such a light would be very advantageous."

"The examination of Abchurch, who encayed from the wreck of the Committee. Breash a currous granula of wreck of the Congueror, presents a curious example of carelessness in inquiry. He stated that on the Friday preceding the wreak, the ship encountered a foul wind in her way up Chemes, and was hove to till a light was seen on her lee bow, when, in attempting to wear, she struck. This gives no information as to the way in which the ship lay without knowing how the wind was, -- question not upon the witness's answering in the negative, the next question, to ascertain how the ship's head lay, what tack she was on (the wind must have been from the cast) was not put. Professional men may know these this not put. Frozentonal men may know these things by intuition, but for the benefit of the unckilled public, it would have been as well to have cliested the particulars in evidence. The question which way the ship's head when she wore is of importance, as it involves the point, whether the Cantain was or was not swere that she was on the French coast, as he would not have laid her to with her head to the shore."—Esseminer.

Report of the Assistant Quartermaster-General, Captain George Reid, to the Head of the Department, Lt.-Col. Garden, Quartermaster-General of the Army, describing George Reid, to the Head of the Department, Lt.-Col. Garden, Quartermaster-General of the Army, describing the enemy's position at Punniar, on Dec. 29, and the mode of attack. Camp, new Punniar, December 30, 1943.

Bia.—I have the honogy to report for your information, that a portion of the left wing of the Army of Exercise (2000 men) totally diseated, on the 29th test. 12,000 men of all arms, of the Gwallor troups, under the command of Sewar Secunder, capturing 23 mans and one standard, with a large quantity of semunition, treasure, baggage, itc.

The wing manched from Simcerca on the 28th, and encamped at Burhake Seral. The Buadelkand Legion, under the command of Capt. Seculacy, was left on the right bank of the Sind river, to geard the torite, and to keep up our communications. Indicatoration the Village of Euliance (I had left half a troop of Carafry in the repr.). I was pursued by about 20 hovemen for some distance, who give up the chase on perceiving the body of my escott. During the day, my spice brought me a report that a night attack upon as was meditated; I had also information of some troops having come to this place to oppose us.

Observing from your sketch map tust there appeared to be a narrow valley leading from Himatgur to this place, I arged General Grey to make it is one marro only (16ft miles). It was effected without any difficulty, and the rear guard reasons this muture by 2 o'clock r.m. By this time the enemy reached their muture by 2 o'clock r.m. By this time the enemy reached their most in Mangore, and opened a fire upon est museme time of beggage. The 2d Cavafry Britanie was termed out immediately, and I necessipment it we reconcilers. I found the enemy strongly posted as per acture, and rude back to camp with my report. All the available troops were under standard time of the past of the comment of the model of the distribution to the low hills near to our right fank places; I be surface out the low hills near to our right fank places; placed on the fortified goats of Mangore and eleme

Lier Mejosty's firsts were first under area, and were dethel to store the height on which the enemy's right was posted, a those adjoining diagnose, the key of his position. I successful condecting the Refib by a cruste which the the heateries in the and reter. This fine tegt, under the gallant numerone Lieu Cui. Clearle, seemed height after height in the east determiny to the contact and in this fine of the heavings connected brism too very batteries; Capt. Showart was hilled at the east, see many in fell, under giupe and syand shot. The Ruffs ways followed one co. of improve and Miners, a portion of which, under Lie Cumingham, turned the first guns captured by the Buffs on the secony. The regt, then charging down the hill rights of hishgard, drove the enessy from a suileh, and caughed Hangare facilities, and the most gallant style, under a heavy five from the haterless which projected it. Here the co. of Sappure under Lieut. Maxwell ideed the Buffs. At this time Capt. Rinds's troop of Herre Artillery opened upon the guns to the left of Mangare, white Right Gaddes, with Capt. Campbell's troop, and with two guns of Capt. Rinds's appared upon the bettery of seven gens in rear of Mangare, and Uniter practice was becutting, alloneing all but one of Mangare, and their practice was becutting, alloneing all but one of Mangare, and they retreated up the bills with groot effect. Lieut. Tombs with use guns of No. 16 12: Field Eastery, and opened on the enemy's left.

The Buffs and Sappures having stormed the height last of Mangare, proceeding onwards carried two more positions, and ultimately gained the highest peak of the range occupied by the camp, on which the colours were planted with three cheers, having opptured in their progress, one standard and 12 guns, before any other regiment had fired a shot. A ulago of the agent, he was attached by General Grey as a support, but it missed the road and never joined the Buffs. At this time the enemy's left was still in force in the valley in front of Mahagara. After pointing them out to Brigadier Yates, I-conducted the Suffs. At this time the enemy's left, they have a differ in the value of the brown of a high which commended, the enemy's position in they had then seven guns in hetery. The Buffs N.I. after fither a volley, charged down upon a bettery of two guns, which they captured in the face of a heavy fire; the enemy met thus regiment in a sullah, award in hand. Brigadier Yates and Major Rarle were here wounded, and the enemy's gune did great exception.

ment in a nuilsh, sword in hand. Brigadier Yabre and Major Earle were here wounded, and the enemy's gues did great greation.

Her Majesty's 58th, supported by 5 companies of 36th N.L. and 5 companies 62th Rem, coming up shortly afterwards, were requested by me to charge down upon the remaining battery, which they carried in gallant style at the point of the bayenet. Here Brigadier Anderson was wounded, and 'aptain Cobhan killed. This reg, was exposed to a heavy five, and lost many men. The companies of the two regiments exporting H.M. 'a 68th, had only two men weakfed. Pashing forward, these regiments then drove the enemy into the hills, beyond the fortified post of Maheware. It was then quite dark, and the action terminated.

It being necessary to occupy the heights during the night, to enable us to carry of our hilled and wounded, and engiated guas, &c., the Sepres Centingent was ordered to relieve the troops, which had been engaged for nextly three hours with the enemy, four miles from eamy, and after a march of sixteen miles.

The enemy's loss was most verere, but the action classing at nightfall, many of their killed and wounded were carried off during the night, and it is difficult to form an estimate of their loss.

Owing to the atrength of their pointuo, and the number of their guas, our loss has also been great.

This morning the Sayree Contingent extended along the height, in reer of Maheswara, whilch the wounded, and modies of the killed, which could not be fuund, owing to the darkness of the night, were brought into camp; see bothes of the enemy were seen in one place.

The enemy memaged to conceal two guns behind Maheswara, which were brought forward in the morning, and opened on the Sepree Contingent, under the command of Captain Smith; after which a party of the Stb Irregular Cavalry, charging forward, took ponsession of the gue, killed several of the enemy, and made some prisoners.

It is to be regretted that the nature of the ground, and night-fall, prevented the Cavalry from pursuing and intercepting the enemy. All their wounded found is the field were brought into enemy. All their wounded found in the Beld were brought into using this morning, and are now under treatment in the hospilat. The whole of the troops engaged evinced, during the day, the most unfinching steadiness, under heavy cannonade, and conspicuous gallantry, in storming the enemy's atrong position. The fertified post of Mangore will be blown up this afternoon.

On Brigadier Fater being wounded, the command of the lat Infantry Brigade develved on Connel Claime, and that of the Buffe on Major Christie. On Acting Brigadier Auderson being wounded, the command of the 3d infantry Brigade develved on Major White, of the 80th Reg. I have, &c. Vister All Khan; or, the Massacre of Benares, a Chapter in British Indian History. Murray.

From a notice prefixed we learn that the "editor" (or author, Mr. J. F. Davis,) of this little memoir author, Mr. J. F. Davis, or this little memoir, ," At first intended it for grivate eirculation only, and as a mere illustration of the history of a gertain Spear, which is deservedly regarded with some waseraflogish his laste father's family; but, as the development of the marghive necessarily connected it with the political history of the period, he has been induced to let it take its chance as a publication."

In the eye of the historic reader, the narrative will derive additional interest from the circumstance of its being, as Mr. Davis informs us, "chiefly indebted" to the Honourable Mountstuart Elphinstone (to whom it is in-scribed) "for the correctness of its details, and for the most interesting particulars of events which happened in the earliest period" of that gantleman's Indian career.

The tragical events here recorded took place at Henares in the year 1799. The Visier All Khan was a deposed Indian prince, of spurious birth, who had been permitted to reside at Benares, with a large pension and a host of retainers. Suspicion having been at length excited against him, he was ordered to proceed to Calcutta. With this order he affected the intention of complying. In the interim, he was under the immediate surveillance of Mr.

order he affected the intention of complying. In the interim, he was under the immediate surveillance of Mr. Cherry, the governor-general's agent.

"(In the 18th of January the mative asperiatement of police, who had been warned to be vigitant, waited on Mr. Devie, (the civil magicirate, rather of the writer of this necrative, and the hero of the tale), and reported to him, that Vislar Ali was engaging a number of armed men in his service, and seemed to make no preparations (or his departure to Calcutta. This was immediately communicated to Mr. Cherry, and the head of the police at the same time desired to which the farther movements of the parties.

"On the night of the 18th, a hurcarrab, or messenger, came to Mr. Cherry's house, and announced that the nawau would wist him on the following moveling, at breakfast. Early on the 14th another emissary came, and after making some inquitries, immediately returned. House time afterwards, Visler Ali's drum was heard, and he was seen to approach, with a train of horse and foot, consisting in all of about 200 men. In numbers this did not much exceed the reliable which he had been accustomed to move with, but a jenghister of Mr. Cherry reported to his master, that this party, libragic of coming in their usual manner, were all armed, and with institute not, and that he was a fool for his fears.

"On Visier Ali's arrival, his host, according to custom, met and handed him in, accumpanied by his friends, Warls Ali, lazur Ali, and another, father-in-law to the light. Mr. Evens, a young private selectury, was also present. The party were attended into the break fast-goom by four followers, armed with awords thields, and pistols. When the chief persons had taken their maste, Mr. Cherry, calling for tes, handed it to Visier Ali, who did not bench Mr. had been the chief persons had taken their maste, Mr. Cherry, calling for tes, handed it to Visier Ali, who did not bench Mr.

something of great consequence to communicate. Then raising his voice, he began to conspiain of the treatment he had retailed from his John Shore, the late Governor General, who, he declared, had at first promised him six lace of rupees per annum, but subsequently reduced it to a much smaller amonist. On his departure, continued Vusier Ali, 'Sir John Shore told we that you would take care of my interests, and attend to my representations; but this you have never done. On the contrary, at the suggestion of Saadat Ali Ghan's you now wish me to go to Calcutta; but Lord Mordington to absent—what should I do there? Sendet Ali Khan whee for my death, and the English are in league with him. They listen to him; but seither you nor any one she attends to two. I shall therefore not proposed to Calcutta, but where I please."

"While he was speaking, Waris Ali cameground from his seat, and placed himself near Bir. Cherry. This seemed to be a concerted signal, for Visier Ali, vising from his chair, setzed Mr. Cherry by the collar, while the other held him behind, and, as he exclaimed against this violence, the Nawaub struck at him with his drawn sword. The compirators now followed the anample set them, and as the unfifturance resident endeavoured to escape through the varantals into the garden, they followed him in a body, and cut him down before he had gone many yards on the outside.

"In the meanwhile, inspit Ali had seized Mr. Evan, and the outside.

"In the meanwhile, Image all had seized Mr. Evans, and grasped at his dagger to state him; but that gentleman holding the assain's band, prevented his design. An attendant of the resident's now came up, and made a cut at Ingat Ali, which he received on his arm, and let go his hold of Mr. Evans, who fied into an adjoining field. There, however, he was seen by some horsemen, who, firing two or three shots, brought him to the ground, upon which same others of the conspirators ran up and despatched him. Captain Conway, an Officer who was living with Mr. Cherry, happened at this moment to ride up to the house, attended by an orderly, and he also was killed by the armed body."

We now proceed to the second act of this eventful drama. Mr. Davis's house was not much more than a quarter of a mile from the scene described. That gen-

we now proceed to the second act of this eventful drams. Mr. Davie's house was not much more than a quarter of a mile from the scene described. That gastleman, on returning from his morning ride, had met Viziar Ali and his train, in their wey to Mr. Charry's residence, but without observing anything remarkable in their appearance. On reaching home, however, he received intelligence which induced alarms.

"Presently to observed Viziar Ali and his train returning with much more harts than itsum; and that some of the horse, lastest or here are not here to loss. Mrs. Davie was told to repair, with her two oblidency and their stiendants, to the terrace on the top of the hones, while he hemself ran for his directors on the top of the hones, while he hemself ran for his directors are all the secondary, which her two oblidency and their stiendants, to the terrace on the top of the hones, while he hemself ran for his directors are all the secondary, he bethought him of a pike, or speer, which he had apstairs, and of feasible with such a weapon. The pike was one of those used by running footmen in height. It was of iron, plated with citieve, in rings, to give a firmer gram, rather more than as inches, with sharp edges.

"Indiag, when on the terrace, that the lowness of the parapet wall argued them all to view, and that they were fired at by the insurgants from below, Mrs. Davie was directed, with her two finance sarrant and the children, to lit down near the centre of the terrace, while Mr. Davie took his fastices on one knee at the trap-door of the sulr, walting for the expected attack. The per-pendicular height of the stair was considerable, winding round a central stem. It was of a peculiar construction, supported by four prode my process of all affects, and so marrow as to allow only a single armed mas to present a stress to the terrace, while Mr. Davie took his fathes on narrow as to allow only a single armed mas a supported at the same time. It opened to not the person to be supported to the sure of the second his

"This recovery of the sity was not essents without loss. The troops married through one of the unberte, and though the entrants were wide, they anifered by the site from the houses and the marrow leaves an earth side. Among others killed, both of General Eratine's orderless were shot at his side. On reaching Mahdoo Door's gunden,, several shots from field-pleace were directed against the fartified house; but the most effectual operation was klowing open the gates by which the troops got armition was klowing open the gates by which the troops got armition to the principal pourt. This was affected just as the aim set. Had the context instead until dark, the town would in all probability have been pillaged by the numerous handitt and adventurers who were now assembled within its precinous."

Visier Ali fled—the insurrection, more extensive and formidable them might have been imagined—was quelied, and its hadler was consigned, as a close prisoner, to Fort William.

"Ore winner, years of applicity, he was transferred to a more suitable prince in the palace built for Tippoo Sultann's family, in the fort of Vellora. There the females of his family subsequently joined him, and there he dipd."

Pifty Days on Board a Slave Vessel in the Moment ique Channel, in April and May, 1843. By the Rev. Pas-coe Grenfell Hill, Chaplain of H. M. S. Cleopatra. John Murray. Even under the mildest possible circumstances, a traffic in human flesh is of the most horrible and revolting character.

"While we boast the name of Wilberforce" (observes the writer of this appalling little volume) "and the genue and elequence which scabled him to arouse so general a seal against the blave-trade; while others are disparing with him the claim of being the true annihilator of the slave-trade; that trade, so far from being annihilated, is at this very hour curvied on under circumstances of greater atrocity than were known in his time, and the blood of the peer victims calls more loudy on us as the actual, though unintentional, aggravators of their miseries."

From unforceseen and unavoidable events, however, in for worse than the disease, it is result, arroved for worse than the disease, It appears that H. M. S. Cierpairs, while eruising in the Mosambique Channel, in the mouth of April last year, captured a Brazilian slave-ship, the present instance, the remedy, in its results, proved for worns than the disease. It appears that H. M. S. Cleopadre, while cruising in the Monambique Channel, in the month of April last year, captured a Brazilian slaw-ship, the Progresse.

"A cutter being hoisted out, an Officer was sent to take possesses, and the British ensign displaced the Brailian. Capt. Wyvill, whom I accompanied, then followed, taking with him the aurpeon, to inspect the state of beath on board the princ. But was a strange some which presented itself to us when we mounted her side. The deck was crowded to the utmost with naked negroes, to the number, so stated in her papers, of 486, in almost rotous continuous, having revolute, before our carriag arctiment, from feelings, it may be supposed, of no pleasant nature. The negroes, a meagre, famished-looking throug, having broken through all control, had estined verything to which they had a fancy in the vessel; some with hands full of 'fariaha,' the powdered root of the mandre or canavar, other with large pieces of port and beef, having broken open the casks; and some that water, casks; and, ushappily, there were some who, by a like method, got at the contents of a cask of 'aguardiente,' fary Hrasilian of the strain of the cope, which they drove the wilder crasher, and, ushappily, there were some who, were illustrated, got at the contents of a cask of 'aguardiente,' fary Hrasilian of the strain of panis from the strangeness of their cituation, mage them year; and thes great part of the space below was resident eschem. They crowded to five grating, and, elinjing to it for air, then plainty berved its newmon. They strove to save their way through spectrum, is longth it inches, and barely 6 inches in treadth, and, in some invitance, recovered. The cries, the heat,—I may may, without entageration, " the masks of their bar, meet,"—which messaded, can be tempered to nothing earthly. One of the Spaniarite gave warning that the consequence would be 'many deaths."—'Manane habr's mechoe meetics."

"Therefor, April 12th (Hely Thursday).—The Spaniarit's prediction of inst night, this morning was teartifly verticed. Fifty-four crushed and margied corpose lifted up from the shreedeck have been brought to the gasgway and thrown overboard. Some were canacisted from disease; many, bruised and bloody. Antonio tells me that some ware found strangied, their hands still grasping each other's throuth, and tongues pretrading from their mouths. The begans of one were crushed out. They had been trampled to death for the most part, the weaker asider the feet of the stronger, in the madeness and berneint of selfcontent from crowd and heat. It was a horrid eight, as they pained one by one,—the etil distorted limbs ensured with thoul and till,—to be sent into the east. Some, still gavering, were laid on the little fresh water poured into their mouths. Autonic reminded me of his last night's warning."

To pursue the dreadful details further would be us lessly to harrow up the feelings of the reader. We thrink from them with horror. Suffice it to say, that in " the fifty days," one hundred and fifty famous beings periched under sufferings indescribable; and that after the Cloppetra's arrival at the Cape, toolee more died, making aggregate of one hundred and seventy-five, out of 397

The following remarks, by the Rev. Pascoe Greafelt Hill, are entitled to especial notice from "the authoriand from all who may be concerned in preventing a continuance of the African Slave Trade :--- ties," and from all who may be concerned in preventing a continuance of the African Slave Trade:—

"It is too munifest, that, under circumstances similar to these which I have melated, the capture of the 'prise' must be an event far more disastrous to the stave than to the slave-dealer. It cannot be supposed that the nocumulated culmulties which menued to the haplens being on hoard the Progresse, on their transfer to the protection of their liberators, could have taken pilice had they continued in the heads of their purphasers. As the latter have the highost interest which men can have in the preservation of an extremely valuable cargo; so are they, of all men, most qualified for the task, by experience of the system best calculated to provide for their health and unfety, and by concurrence of able hands, in ample number, to carry that system into effect. In these respects, the reverse may generally be asserted of those who, on capture of the vessel by a ship of war, succeed to their charge. Those who know the Naval service are aware that a cruiser, especially on a sickly station, can often but ill spare more hands to send away in a prize than are barely sufficient for their proper duties in working the vessel. The number thus sent away will be further liable to reduction by sickness, from the tainted, unbiratify atmosphere to which they are introduced, and other causes possible to be described in the case of the Progress, every seaman was in his turn disabled by linees. It is also to be remembered, that the Officer in command of the prise, on whose exertions and discretion the welfare of the resceed negroes mainly depends, is encompaned by professional difficulties of a very engrossing hind, increased, in many cases, by the noveity of an independent command, and the weakness of his crew, should sickness oneur among them, is a vessel unproved as to her sea qualities, worse provided in Naval stores than those to which has been accestomed, and on a coast provided among 18 or 30 persons, well trained to the work, Trus publication, the oldest, and, at all times, un mes punication, the eldest, and, at all times, unquestionably the best, of its class, appears to have been recently placed under a new and greatly improved system of editorship. It now consists of original papers, generally applicable to circumstances of the moment—of historical appreciates. historical sarratives, biographical memoirs, illustrations of manners and customs, topographical descriptions, sketches and tales, anecdores, interesting extracts from new works, poetry, discoveries in the arts and sciences, &c. Many of the original articles are remarkably well dec. Many of the original articles are remarkably well written; and soundness of judgment, with correctness of taste, is prevalent throughout. In the course of the present volume, several beautiful specimens are given of the new art of gipphography, as applied to the illustrations of literary works, and other purposes. The genealogy and armorial bearings of great and remarkable families form a very acceptable feature. Altogether, we consider "The Mirror" to be taking a higher ground than it had farmerly marmial. than it bad formerly vecupled.

MARTERS, ROYAL NAVY.
To the Editor of the Moral and Millery Generic.
Str.,—Your columns being always open for any observation that may lead to the benefit of the Bervice and those employed in its various branches, induces me to hand you my comments on inferring to the survivale of that most valuable class of Officers, the Masters.

I have taken the names of those on Mr. Murray's List, standing at 100 entitled for 7s. per day, half-pay; but to my surprise, on comparing them with Commander Haultain's List, I can only find forty-three that receive such sum, because the remainder are not qualified for first-rates; and what is the more striking, some are abown as only passed for sixth-rates; yet to enter into the whys and wherefores would be useless—such is

May I not presume from this, that it was never the intention of their Lordships to deprive the mariterious Officer of any benefit, but to reward those who had undergone the study, exertion, and expense of qualifying themselves for first-exces; and may I ask, would it be unfair to make up the deficiency thus?

"That those who have passed for a first-rate, although now below Mr. Murray's line of distinction, and now receiving but fie, per day, should be included to make up the 190,"

If this could be adopted, I do not find even on the said Go. List sufficient, as I can only rackon forty-abven that would be entitled.

To be more certain as to the names of those who have gone to the expanse of passing regularly to the upper-rate, I would strongly recommend that their names de appear in Roman capitals on luture liets for the dates of entry: and this, in my opinion, would cause an amula-tion in that class of Officers, when so distinguished to the public, as having prepared themselves to undertuke any duty in the Service which they may be called upon to perform, for the benefit of the country.

A WELL-WIBHER TO THE NAVY.

Portemouth, Feb. 14.

There is much sense in the above proposition, and we see no possible objection to it. We hope, however, that a more enlarged benefit will be extended—that the old and work-out Officers may be removed from the Active List to a well-earned retirement, and that a thorough reform of the class will take place ..... #### THE SIZPENNY ACT. - PENSION WARRANT. To the Miller of the Namel and Military Ognetic.

Sin,—The subject broughed in the floure of Commons, in the debate on the Army Estimates could never have happened more opportune, being just the time that the Big. penny Act, now ten years in operation, was making itself felt by all under its control. When ten years, the " beyday of life," or at least of manhood has passed, even the most thoughtless look with a grave eye on the futureand such a future !

I think it was Frederic the Great of Prussia who gave his old soldiers, as a provision, a licence to hop, the prespect, shough a poor leak-but for the warriors, was at least equal to the "Sixpeany Act," a pittance which any parish is obliged to expend on any pauper. "Twas only yesterday I heard a soldier ask a nomrade what service he had? The reply was, "Oh, I'm on the Sixpeany Act." The other, with a shrug replied, "I thank God Act." The other, with a strug replied, " I thank God I'm smore fortunate, for I escaped that." It may be replied, the soldier was aware of the pension warrant on enlisting. I don't think it: and even if he was, where is the lad of from seventeen to twenty Sould give a thought about the provision allotted for tilm, when he would be some eyen, some teeth, some hair, some everything. Wo! it is not in human nature; and held out, there would not be a single recruit less; it is notorious that few of them know even the duly pay of the corps they join. And is this simplicity to be taken uge of?

There might be a fairness in any pension warrant if so soldier, like the policeman, could leave at pleasure, or even at a limited service, but an unlimited one requires no comment.

Now that I have mentioned limited service, there is no measure which would condece more to the benefit and respectability of the Service, and one which would be an almost certain remedy against desertion. Just think for a moment that a man by desertion passes an act of outlawry against himself, even should be eccape, and not taking into eccount the results consequent on detection; but that men knowing that a few years would bring freedom, the inducement would be stridg to fight it out, and as it is well known that young soldiers principally desert, these few years would place the Service and him (in all likelihood) better friends. Besides, it would make promotion (which is now so slow in the humble grades) more open, as many non-cous. Officers in their peregrinations open, as many non-com. Officers in their peregrinations through life, and in full bealth, would settle as opportunities might offer, and leave their places to others; but the majority, as in the Navy, would make it a life affair, action night offer, and leave their panels to others; but the majority, as in the Navy, would make it a life affair, with the advantage of not requiring the listism, or the net scalous, in pass, and he a drag upon the Service.

A salid's duty is more difficult, "is harder" to isseen, then the soldier's, and theirs is limited; the consequence is that friends see them go to see (although hyperestily the more dengarous service) without my drawbest of Seeling, compared with that of a young man leaving as a soldier; for the latter when he returns, returns a strunger satisfarmage faces; the former finds the same friends, to whom his adventurous life, and he healthy, ready, complessed is an inducement, " do thou likewise." Again, it would improve the soldier's character if you would make him partly his own master, therefore a more respectable posses, and not so thoughtlesse. His friends and home would always influence, and you would give the toving bank a tangibility. To finish with the saving bank, the clause which gives the Captain the option of rubning the lesses, is considered a drawback, as a soldier's pay, paitry though it is, is the only thing he has (when in his own hands) unlimited control of.

THE PRACTICE OF COURTS-MARTIAL

To the Editor of the Nucul and Millibry Gasette.

Sin,—It is laid down in the Regulations for the Army, that Commanding Officers of regiments are to require Officers, on their entence into the Army, to attend the proceedings of all such Course as may occur in the corps, r at least six months from the date of their joining Now, I must say, that I cannot see any advantage arising from an Officer's attending Courts-Marrial for such a time. The only peris of the preceedings that the supernumerary from an Officer's attending Courts-Martial for such a time. The only parts of the precedings that the supernumerary hears are the evidences for the presention and defence, as he is not allowed to be present during the time that the Court is closed. What advantage can it be to an Officer to attend such proceedings for air menths? Any one, even with the duliest comprehension, could know quite as much about the matter in the hame number of days. Further: the Regulations say, "Officers are not to be nominated members of Courte-Martial until the Commandian Officer shall deep them perfectly comments." Commanding Officer shall doesn them perfectly competent to so important a duty." How, I would set, is the Commanding Officer to judge, whether the Officer to competent or not? • He may, indeed, assertain whether he knows the proper punishments for different effences, but no one except the Presidents of Courts-Martial sea correctly judge whether he is fully acquainted with his

Now, Sir, I think that these svils might be easily re Now, Str. I think that these evits might be easily remedied in the following manner. Let all Officers, on their first joining, he sworn into secrety, like the members, and remain present during the whole of the proceedings. The President ought also to consult them as to whether they President ought also to consult them as to whether they consider the prisoner guilty or not, though of course their opinion should have no weight; and he should explain to them the nature of the case, in order to eachle them to take a right rief of it. After the precedings are ever the President might report to the Commending Officer whether he considered the supernumerary sequalisted fully with the different points of Military law, and if he considered him fit to sit as a member of a Court Martial.

remainment nim me to me as a member or a Court Martial.

This plan I think is very simple, and could very easily be carried into effect. It would have the great advantage of making Officers fully acquainted with one of the most us making tymoors raily acquainted with one of the most important duties they are called upon to perform; they would be able to fulfil their daty in the most just and sorrect manner, by having been taught by old Officers; and in difficult cases, such as often occur, in a much shorter time, they would have more experience to discriminate as to the imposence on mile of the imposence on the imposence of the ste as to the innocence or guilt of the pelconer, thenseconding to the present system.

Naval & Military Gazette.

ŠATURDAY, MARCH 16, 1844.

Ir proof were needed by the Princes and People of India that the Governor-General adhered to treaties, that proof was given by the march of our Army on Gwalior, and the restoration of power into the hands of those whom by treaty we were bound to defend and support. The presence of the Governor-General and of the Commanderin-Chief with the Army at Gwallor, gave immediate effect to the objects for which the Army advanced. We cannot too highly commend this arrangement : instead of Political Agents, and a lengthy correspondence, we find the Governor-General on the spot, and his immediate order to place the Government of Gwallor in the right hands, to support it by a contingent force, and to evacuate the territories by our own Army. The very greatest gramblers at Lord Ellenborough's administration must admit the wisdom good faith, and promptitude of all the measures adopted for restoring peace and good government to Gwalior. The victories achieved by the sword have not been lost by the pen, as has too frequently happened; and in this instance, at least, all must admit that the made war for the purposes of peace. Where anarchy and confesion rioted we have restored right rule and good order, rendering once more war an instrument, under Providence, of civilisation and bappiness.

We must further revert to the radget victories; nor will our readers he displeased if we dwell a space on two wellfought fields, and point their attention to the guillant deeds of Officers and men. The East has of late years been for our soldiers their brightest battle-ground : there all ranks have reaped or gleaned fame in the "iron harvest of the We are not of those who, in these more recent victories, can forget the greater past; nor are we even disposed to compare invidiously the actions in Science with those in the territories of Scindle. They are all too escenclude accountrements and appointments as well as clothing. I tially different to call for comparison, and the pro The 17th Article of the Warrant shows clearly that the | not the most exitable time to compare the not the most suitable time to compare them, were we so disposed. We have recorded, in our last Number, two "force and flery fights," two very brillient victories. The forces sent into Gwelior seem to have been judiciously divided, with a view to make the campaign as short as possible—antisipating that victory must crown our arms, whichever wing first came into action with the enemy; the other was so directed as to prevent the enemy from long baffling us by flight. The combinations appear to have been well planned for both wings, and the results corresponded.

By private letters which we have seen, the conduct of all the Officers commanding regiments is spoken of in very high terms. The Commander most noticed for his imperturbable bearing under fire, and for leading his regiment over very broken and difficult ground, with a rare skill and judgment, was Lieutenant-Colonel Cluniet, of the Buffs, through whose able leading that regiment promptly effected for General Grey a most decisive movement, with a loss which, under a less cool veteran, would have been enormous. The noble spirit that breathed through all. from the Commander-in-Chief to the faithful and fearless private and sipabee, would seem to render especial praise a wrong; but we deem it our duty to hold out that Officer as an example, who, combining tactics with valour, and coolness with high courage, led his men to great glory without any rashness, and effected victory with the least loss of his ardent soldiers. This praise, we know, is peculiarly due to Colonel Clunie, of the Buffs, and we render it as praise of the highest character,

In these remarks we beg not to be misunderstood. We prize highly-perhaps too highly-physical courage; we know its animating effects on our soldiers-its electric influence flying through whole masses' of men, and communicating the soul of the leader into those he leads. Sir Hugh Gough has enumerated these daring leaders in his despatch. There is but one he fails to praise-'tis the Commander-in-Chief himself. With a modesty meriting all praise, he dwells on the deeds of others; and, if it were not for his signature, we could hardly learn that it was round "his white plume" the troops gathered in the thickest of the fight. General Grey, too, writes his despatch with pride in his Officers and men, and with humility of his own great exertions, and exposure to the enemy's fire. The brunt of both actions at Maharejpoor and Punniar fell on Her Majesty's troops, as evinced in the heavy loss of the 3rd, the 39th, the 40th, and 50th Regiments; but the Native Infantry and Cavalry nobly systained their high character everywhere.

These actions were chiefly characterised by the dashing and daring leading of Officers. In this all accounts agree; and even the Governor-General himself was seen inspired by a Military ardour, which would have, in similar pircumstances, rendered him a second Elphinstone, and made him the hero of Gwalior, as the other was of Kirken. His kind offices to the wounded do honour to him as a man.

Where bravery in all was boundless, we trust to see that rewards may not be limited. The Fountain of Honour is a fresh-welling spring, and the more it is drawn on, the more plenteous should be the supply. It is not for us to enter on an enumeration of those to be marked by Her Majesty's favour, but we trust that at least those recommended in the despetches may meet the rewards suited to their gallant conduct. These noble soldiers will little miss prize-money, if they but gain the great prizes in the Military lottery-Medals, Brevst renk, or the Honours of the Bath.

Loan Howsen is indebted to our thanks for bringing to notice, in the debate on the Army Estimates, the state of our Barracks in many foreign stations, as well as the papardonable recklessness of human life involved in the frequent issue of sait provisions to troops in tropical climates. This lest is an evil which has happily been storially dissinished in these later days. The brief statistics of mortality address by his Lordship are issuent-able proofs of the felly and perversity of which our troops have been the victime—evidences that in situations who physical authorings have been the greatest; the most simple and obvious remedial measures were neglected. This, however, we repeat, in a grievance which her been in a are redressed. Not so the other, which we have mentioned in connection with it—that of bad, unneces sarily bad, Barrack Accommodation. Our columns have ently been devoted to an exposure of this deficiencychiefly as connected with the superior classes, the Com missioned Officers of the Army-but we are not the less sensible of the discomfort and detriment to health to which the private soldier has been, and still is exposed in his herrack.

Military medical writers and others, those best qualified to offer an opinion, from personal observation and experience, have almost universally condemned the ineligibility of site, the inconvenient arrangement, and inadequacy of space, which characterise our barracks abroad. We much fear that the urgent representations made on this score have hitherto met with little attention. The Military in hot climates are still crowded into a space totally incomcompatible with the preservation of their health, even where the remedy is obvious, and not difficulty of attainment. On the other hand, many of our large barrackrooms at home are damp and insufficiently warmed. More over, we believe that barracks of more recent construction abroad, are obnoxious to the old objections of stinted accommodation and inconvenience, from the effluvia of outoffices injudiciously located. Lestly, in many instance the sufferings of the occuments from vermin are ingredible to any but such as have been eye-witnesses; and this is not an unavoidable or necessary evil, or we should not quote it, but arises from mispisced economy, We carnestly trust that the subject of Barrack Reform and Improvement will meet with that attention which is so loudly calls for, both as a measure of justice to the soldier. and as a saving to the public : for the latter is involved in the preservation of the soldier's health.

GOVERNMENT have taken a vote for six thousand Marines to be employed on shore for the ensuing year, and we may therefore expect that there is no immediate probability of any extensive increase to our Naval force but as the troops serving in India, and on other foreign stations, cannot at present be relieved by Line regiments. on account of the number of men required for Ireland might not we then send some of the Royal Marines abroad, and thus enable a corresponding number of the troops of the Line to come home?

Suppose we say that sight hundred men shall be kept at each of the Divisional Head Quarters-and this number we think quite sufficient for the purpose of drilling their recruits, and instructing young Officers in their flaties-we thus provide for three thousand two hundred men; send four hundred men to Pembroke Dock to furnish detachments to South Wales; we shall still be enabled to keep eight hundred in Ireland, and may send eight hundred to Gibraltar, and the same number to Malta.

By distributing the force in this manner, we shall accomplish many very desirable purposes; namely, we shall enable the men to complete their time for pensions,-for it is to be remembered that the Marines ofly count one year's time for two years' service in Great Britain; we should, therefore, in justice give them an opportunity of serving abroad: we shall relieve and bring home soldiers of the Line, who have already been too long in a foreign olimate: we shall teach the Officers of Marines something of the Army discipline and detail of duty: we shall prevent the men from increasing the already too numerous stock of wives and children, awarming stound avery Marine barrack: and, finally, we shall give active employment to several meet scalous Field Officers, who are warmly attached to the Service, and antices for commands be in a good central position, always ready for ambarkation.

By stationing Bettellons of Marines at Maite and Gibraliar they will be reedy at short notice, should we require them, for the Navel Survice; from Gibroliar we

The system of restricting the distribution of honorary rewards to Officers of superior rank, has been a source of much dissatisfaction in the British Service, particularly in corps where promotion is by gradation. It will, therefore, be a subject of congratulation that there is now some spprouch to a more equitable arrangement; for we learn by ne General Orders and Despatches, published in our last Gazette, that the victorious Army in India, under Sir Hugh Gough, is to be distinguished by a star, made from the cannon taken from the enemy; we also observe that the heroes of Jallalabad are to be rewarded by a model, now in preparation at the Mint; and that a similar decoration is dectined for those who had the honour of serving in China.

When rewards are thus bestowed it cannot be deeme invidious to recal to the notice of the Government the Undescripted Warriors who shared in the glorious campaigns of the Peninsula, and in the many stirring events of the war ; nor will it be considered ill-timed to urge the claims of the neglected veterans of the Nile, of Copenbagen, and of Trafalger, whose names are recorded in the lists we are in course of publishing.

At this period, when a grateful nation is erecting proud emorials of the fame of England's renowned chieftains, it is to be hoped that the event will be perpetuated by the institution of a Military Order of Merit, which, like the " Legion of Honour" of Napolson, will enable the warrior, when he points to his scars, to exult in exhibiting the insignia on his breast won by his valour.

It will be seen by our Parliamontary Analysis, that Colonel Leith Hay gave notice on Thursday that he should move next Wednesday an Address to Her Majesty praying the Crown to confer some bedge of distinction on the surviving Officers of the Poninsular Army: we would amend the motion by the words the-" Surviving War-Officers of the Army and Navy."

WE invite attention to a letter from one of our correpondents on the different treatment experienced in the French and English Armies by those elevated from the ranks to be Commissioned Officers. We conceive that even Measrs. Hume, Williams, and Co., would not much object, in the debate on the Army Estimates next year, if one of the Items were for "Outfit of Officers promoted from the ranks, at £60 each." The hardship is seriously felt by many most deserving men, who would proudly receive from their country that aid, on their appointment which now they most reluctantly, and of sheer necessity, accept from the Officers under whom they have served in the ranks. As we have imitated Coats, Caps Hats, Arms, and one-half of all we call Military, from foreigners, we ought not to stop short at the excellent system followed in the French Army, of supplying the Outfit to Officers raised from the ranks, whose meaus are inadequate to meet the expense. Occasionally a Commission might be sold to meet this charge, if the " Econemists" gradge this boon to our soldiers :---

In the French Army, the seldler, raised to the rank of Commissioned Officer, gets from his Government his promises miss," which amounts to 525 france. This ' première miss,' to equip himself as an Officer. During the Peninsular War, many Serjeants were raised, by the Duke of Wellington, to the rank of a Commissioned Officer; I knew several of those brave, but poor fellows, and I can assure you, as I now do, that the difficulties they had to contend with, in order to complete their first rigging, were exceedingly dis-

You, Sir, know that every man who enters the French Army, or, indeed, any of the Continental Armies, must enter as a private soldier; therefore I used hardly ob-nerse that the "pression mise" is only given to the soldier who is either a dependent on his pay, or the sen of a pamper. I successly hope you may be pleased to point out soldier who is either a depende te our Government (in your own pagellar way), as worthy of their imitation, the generosity and liberality which the promière soise" exhibits.

> THE promotion of the old Captains and Subalterns of the Army without purchase seems almost hopeless. Of late, we observe that vacancies are usually filled up in the regiments by the senior of the next runk, however short his standing may be in the Segvice, and however inferior his claims muy be to the seniors of his rank in the Army. On running our eye over " Captain Hart's Annual Army List," it grieves us to see the long list of Captuins and Lieutenants, whose services are most meritorious, yet from their regimental position cannot expecialor years to reach the top of the list of their respective ranks, and thus stand first for promotion in their regiments. Captains, of more than thirty years' full-pay service, abound; and Lieutenants of the Peninsular War are still seen toiling the dull round of a regimental Orderly Officer under Ouptains instructed by them in . those duties they now order them to perform. This is destructive of zeal, ruinous to good discipline, and unjust to the poor but highly-deserving Officers of the Army.

> Tus three days' balloting-Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday-at the United Service Club, has passed over without black-balling. Sixty candidates were elacted. We wish this improved system of beliet was adouted by a kindred club, and likewise by snother in the neighbourhood of Trafaigas Square.

Wn are most desirous of calling the attention of the Lords of the Admiralty to the very few Mates of the Royal Navy, now employed as Chief Officers in the Coast Guard, with a view to their promotion on the first happy occasion which may produce a brevet in the United Services. There are but fourteen Maten so serving, of whom some are of advanced seniority, vis .the senior of twenty-two and a half years, one sixteen years, two fifteen years, one fourteen years, two thirfeen years, one twelve years, and three ten fears. The alsima of these eleven Naval Substitutes, the lunior of whom has been sixteen years from the first joining the Royal Navy, merit much consideration for their long and faithful services; and when it is considered that the promotion would cost the nation another shilling only per diem, each officer, we cannot but Yeel that their Lordships of the Addiralty would extend their patronuge to the taking in of the names of these eleven Officers on the first partial promotion that may offer, particularly as they were deprived, most unexpectedly, of one shilling per diem, in consequence of the recommendation of the Navat and Military Commission, to reduce the half-pay of Naval Lieutenants promoted in future, to four shillings per diem, until they had served three years on full-pay.

The introduction of Naval Mates into the Coast Guard originated from the evident reluctance of Lieutenante to serve in it, as their brother Officers in every other Service under Government, are superiorly remunerated. The Mates being appointed as Chief Officers, in the first instance received four shillings per diam, Coast Guard pay, and five shillings additional, the amount of the then innior Lieutenants' half-pay, but lost one shilling a day shortly afterwards, as explained above.

Their Lordships, in the Admiralty circular regulating the annual Coast Guard promotions, explained the reasons of their desire to absorb these appointments held by Mates, either by removing them to active Service, or by the annual promotion of one Mate; so that by the promotion of the cleven Officers of meritorious conduct and services on the first brevet, but three of the junior would remain to be promoted in the three following years, through the recommendation of the Comptroller-General—thus carrying out their Lordships' views, and conferring on these Officers the honourable reward they have so long arduously striven to merit, and which would be an incentive to future zeal and exertion in the Revenue Service, -- a service, in these times of Naval inactivity, in which there are more fetigue and vigilance by day and night required, than in any other under the Crown.

We commented some time since upon the alteration made in the pay of Clerks of the Navy by the New Regulations, and condemned the reduction in large ships. The necessity for keeping up a constant supply of liberallyeducated young men to fill the situation of Clerke abould. we think, be a anfilcient inducement for the Admiralty to establish a better scale of pay. We before suggested that the pay of Mates and Second Masters would not be too high for Clerks; but it would perhaps be right to give that amount of pay to passed Clerks only. We leave this subject to the consideration of those in power, at the same time recommending, for attentive parusal, the subjoined letter from " An Old Subscriber."

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gardite.

Sim.—In the debate on the Navy Estimates in the House of Commons on Friday, March 1, Sir George Cockburn seid, in reply to questions by Captain Pecheli, that burn said, in reply to questions by Captain Peckell, that—
"The next point was relative to Captains' Clerks. If a case quild have been made out for the Clerks before the commission, of which Lord Minto was the head, aome years ago, he (&ir G. C.) would have been happy to see their condition bettered. But there was this difference between Clerks and others—that the Clerk was chosen by the Captain. If a Captain wanted to benefit a man, he took him on board and made him his Clerk, and he was responsible to the Captain and nobody else; and the Captain moved about, his Clerk with him wherever he went, without adjug time in the service, yet it should be recollected that he did not become attached to the Service, nor become known to the Service originally through the Admiralty. 'He did not know what was the pay of a Clerk, but he knew there were no persons from which it might be inferred that their situation was not a bad one."

It is very evident, Bir, that Sir George Cookburn's information respecting the Clerks of the Navy is incorrect. Clerks and others suter the Naval Service in precisely the same way; it is necessary for a Captain to obtain permission to enter a Clerk on board the ship he commands, in the same way that he obtains permission to enter a Naval Cadet, which is by application to the Admiralty. Clerks Naval Cadets and others do the same. A Captains—Naval Cadets and others do the same. A Captain may confer a benefit on a man by taking him af his Clerk, but what Captain would do so if "the man knew nothing of a Clerk's duties, which are admitted to be important, and which few Captains thoroughly understand? Clerke nearly always serve a year or two as Clerks' Assistants to learn their duty; the Clerk is responsible to his Captain for the due performance of his duty, as well as all other junior Officers, and promotion is held out as an inducement for the Clerk to perform his duty with care and zeal; Captains are not allowed to move their clerks from one ship to another without per-mission, but they generally obtain permission to do so, as they know the value of a good Clerk, and therefore will not willingly part with him. I submit, Sin that Clerks are attached to the Service, and become known to the Service in the same way that juniors in other branch become known in it. Sir George also stated that he did not know what was the pay of a Clerk. A Clerk's pay after the 1st April next will be 41, a month in ships under a third rate—a sum barely sufficient to keep them decently while employed, without allowing them to save a halfpenny for their subsistence on shore when paid off from their ships, which will account for the number of applications made to the Admiralty for employment, and not, as Sir George supposes, because the situation is so good a one. When Clerks have been employed in the Navy, they are naturally anxious to remain, so as not to throw away their claims and servitude, and in the hope of obtaining promotion; but they are generally, as Sir George remarks, a long time before they get it, although they have as much right to promotion, after passing their examinations, as any other persons in the Naval Service. Sir George Cock-Bir George Cockburn is alway anxious to advance individuals in the Service, and I am convinced he has been misinformed as to the condition of Clerks. Yours, &c.,

March 6. AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.

In the House of Commons, Captain Bernal, in moving for some papers on Monday evening, brought forward the circumstance of the refusal of a pension to Mrs. Fawcett, the widow of the Officer who was killed in the late duel; this he endeavoured to show was an act of cruelty towards that lady, which he hoped to see set askin. Sir Henry Hardings in answer justified the course pursued in this particular case, principally for the reason of the family connection between the parties; and in the course of his argument, stated that he had received Her Majesty's sanction to introduce amended Articles in the Mutiny Bill, for more effectually preventing duciling between Officers of the Army on full-pay, in the hope that the example of suppressing the practice in the profession, would have great influence amongst other classes of gentlemen. In the course of the discussion—it could carcely be called a debate-Mr. Duncombe read some extracts from the annexed letter, addressed to him by Mr. Munro, to show the difficult position in which he was placed, the time that slapsed before he resorted to extreme placed, the time that clapsed be measures, and the advice he had recourse to in the laterval; this letter informs the public of the real origin of the quarrel, which previously was only a matter of con-jecture. Judging from this alone—and all other means are now beyond reach—it would appear that Colonel Fawcett was wrong in indulging in passionate remarks and reflexions on the loss of a paltry fifty pounds; but seeing him in that temper, the most prudent thing for Mr. Munro would have been to have left the house, and waited until his brother-la-law was in a more quiet mood, before he again discussed the question. It is, however, more easy to say what would have been the most prudent course, than to have followed it correctes. As the alteres-tion continued relative to the fifty pounds, it appears by the letter that Mr. Mearo, after reproaching Colonel Pawcett with having made a different return then he aspected for the trouble he had taken on his behalf, continued, "I have served you as no other man could have done, and you have frequently insinuated that I neglected your affairs or interest when you were absent." Now, if Colonel Fawcett was conscious, in his own mind that he had never made the 'insinuations' with which he was charged, it would naturally increase the irritation under which he laboured, and he pronounced impera-tively, "I did not, Bir;" then it was certainly Mr. Munro's business either to have given his authority, or have expressed regret at having made the charge; but he only as a rejoinder said, "You did, or I understood you to This flat contradiction led directly to the great affront of being shown the door, an insult the amount of which no one will deay, but still within the bounds of reconciliation between two parties so nearly connected and happening with no other witness than a servant. Mr. Munro states in his letter, that he was so confounded under this unexpected violence, that he remained quite overwhelmed for some minutes, and then went away. We can enter a good deal into his feelings as an excuse for what followed; but his return to the house was the fatal step, as it brought the affair almost positively to a rupture.

Still, we think that if he had met with a friend of judgment, the affair might have been settled by pressing on Colonel Fawcett the propriety, generosity, and henour that would have attended his apologising for the affront. In all we have written on the subject of duelling, we have endeavoured to impress the very great responsibility of seconds in affairs of this kind. Had there been, in this case, two men of worldly experience, joined to a sause of bonour, in all probability the fatal result might have been avoided; we have no wish to cast any reflection on the seconds in this case, further than they wanted experience sufficient for such delicate affairs, where the principals are mere machines, acting under their counsel and advice, and are often forced to act in direct opposition to their Out of evil may own inward feelings and sentiments. Out of evil may dome good, and we have every hope that the creatty and absurdity attending on this duel, will have more been in putting down the practice than amended Articles of War. Hare we see two persons, who ought to have been allied as well by friendship as the ties of family, put into deadly foud about a comparative trifle; one of them is killed, and his wife refused a pension; the other has lost his Commission, is an outlaw from his country, and the victim of regret and remorse; while the two sees de, on whom such heavy responsibility rested, have been tried and sequitted!

When men look for executors to their will, treaters to their marriage, or for guardians to their children, they search for people of experience and discretion; but when their own lives and honour are at stake, they frequently trust them to the keeping of some hot headed boy, who thinks he adds a feather to his cap in being engaged in a duel! Men of knowledge of the world, and who have a regard for their Principals, will always endeavour to bettle these matters without going to the field, and if that dire necessity arrives, they will keep it within all the bounds in their power.

"Sir,—Although I have not the hopeint of being acquinted with you, yet, as I know your readinate to sympathine with those who may (often for some wise purpose) be visited by Frievidense with severe and sudden affliction. I beg leave to lag. before you the following particulars of my unitappy ears, as I aim, desirous of their being published; and I hope that a parsail of their may remove from the minds of many good men much of their may remove from the minds of many good men much of their may remove that I believe to have been angendered against one by the false-boods that have been industriously minusten upon the vary melancholy satject, and also of drawing the attention of Sorwinsont to the messailty, angelvel as justice, of protecting Officers who may be grownly insulted, by the obvious basefit that cause thus from inserting a clause in the Articles of Was, furthfidding all Officers from giving or receiving challenges upon pain of losing their Commissions, and instituting a competent court before which Officers, who consider that they had been insuited or injured in their characters, may juy their complaints for investigation, redress, or salvies. The establishing such a point would in all probability put an effectual stop to the immentable practice of duelling. At present there is a trap laid for all gracticemen who have the former to blar Her Majesty's Commission, into which the most inoffensive man who ever lived might fell when he least expected it. They Officers know anything of the civil or ariminal leawled the sountry, but there are also few but know what an Officer has to expect should be peas unnoticed a gross personal insulf; and too many have seen the wretched and pitacous object that an Officer becomes who may be supposed to have shown he want of courage in action, or in recenting an insult. The scorned existence of such unfortunate men is too frightful to contemplate; as they are generally aminable and most sensitive, their unhappy lives are frequently terminated by franchisty and seleide, or they slak into a premature grave, from indescribable and conceiled minery. I have to observe that I am most anxious to avoid giving offence to any of the great and good men that comprise Her Majesty's Government, and I hope if may be partioned for publicity expressing to the Dake of Wallington my snost unbounded gratitude.

It has been shid that I was to enter a foreign ferrice, and I have occasionally in my solitude and wratchedness thought of doing no; but my heart and affections are, and were will remain, with my kindered and my country, and I do not think that I need be sahamed of owning that when alone I have shed many a bitter tear for what has happened, but which I could not prevent; yet I have a great consolation in the assertance that my merifals and all-seeing Maker will hold me guilties of the abounhable and horrible orime which erring men, like myself, lay to my charge.

"Most unfortunately I underfoot, in 1839, to set as agent for Lieut.-Col. "I am mainter of the great and most file Thomas Hardy.

The room of the great and good file Thomas Hardy is now in a file way of being perpetuated, as it richly desire the to be. A public meeting of the most influential nablemen and genery of the country which claims the honour of having given him birth, took place in the Town-hall of Dorobaster, on Saturday the 2nd last, Lord honder of inving given him birth, took place in the Town-hell of Derbhester, on Saturday the 2nd lest., Lord lichester in the chair, is order to open a situeription for the purpose of placing a suitable monument of the gallant, Hardy spon his native—the Ringdon—hills. Although a signes of difficulty generally attends the assembling together of country gentleman, except for electioneering, agricultural, and such like purposes, a thierable muster was on this occasion effected, and certain monintions were mused which embeds conventing were resolutions were passed which embody everything necesresolutions were passed which embody everything neces-sary by way of preliminary; and we trust, through the exertions of those gentlemen who have so far succeeded, to find the very destrable object at length attained. We understand that sithough chiefly a county testimonial, the subscription is to be open to the Messmates, Shipmates, and friends of the late ismented Chief; and we doubt not that the mite of the poorest of his admirers will be equally asceptable with the more coally offerings of the rich, since the testimoulal is not to be a mark of adulation, but rather a tribute of admiration and affection, due to the worth and services of the deceased.

There is no stronger proof wanting of the generous feeling of the men of Derset, than is to be found in their efforts to determine the locality of the honoured spot. The Governor of Portland, Captain Manning, tempted the meeting with an offer of all the atoms necessary for the areaction, provided the "Varn" were selected in preference to the Blajdon kills; but as it appears Sir Thomas Hardy had himself, when in command of the experimental squad-res, fixed upon the latter as a fitting place for a sea-mark, this offer was declined; but another gentleman, Mr. Mansfield, not to be outdone by his Portland neighbour, offered abandance of stone from the Portecham quarry, as well as the site of land, a supply of water, the use of lime-kiln, &c. This generous emulation is only what might have been expected; but we hope now for the fature to see all go together with one hand and one heart, and that the union will be productive of a monument honourable alike to the country and the here.

Theatre, on Tuesday, to the convicted conspirator, and foul-mouthed traducer of England and the English, was attended by a large heterogeneous compounds of inferior metropoliten society, including Chartists, Radicals, Revo-lutionists, sight-scars, and germina led there by ouriosity. Mr. Thomas Duncombe was in the chair, supported by Lords Shrewsbury and Dunbeyne, and a few dismbers of Parliament; who, in the words of the Times were not ashamed to "do honour and homege to a man who has for years been belching forth the hoarded rancour of his malignant bile against the honesty and the courage of Saxon men, and the chastity of Saxon women: for this cause did Englishmen unite in one great demonstration of gratitude to the hypocritical slanderer who formerly revited their wives and sisters with a calumny as hideously foul as his adulation is now nauseously falsome. Won-derful are the effects of that political sympathy which can make men forget the claims of country, kindred, and honour." And we may add, that this was pretty evident on the present occasion; for although the managers had the decency to propose the toust of "the Army and Navy," a considerable number of the malignant confederacy did not reason to the order that pasts. did not respond to it, or rise from their scats.

On Thursday evening the Repeal gentry of St. Giles's, and the resident Irish from all parts of the metropolia, met in the Theatre of Covent-Garden, to sympathise the convicted conspirator. The meeting was remarkable for nothing but its regamnifin aspect, and the large array of rabble which graced the theatre from the pit to the processium, and from the platform to the gallery. In reality, it was nothing but a grand gathering of canaille—the cream, in fact, of the Anti-Corn Law, Socialist, and Chartist factions. Scarcely a respectable person was dis-coverable even in the select sanctum of the dress circle, which was filled with nothing but filth and fustian Daniel rose with his band upon his heart, and with all that theatrical clap trap and hypocysisy at which he so practised an adept, made one of those regular Repeal speeches so often delivered at his monster meetings. They might imprison him—(Loud cries of "No, niver") he might wear out his eyabrows in looking through the burs of his dungson, but he would be supported by the consolatory conviction that he had done his best to gain justice for Ireland, "whose sun was now rising while others had set." Several inflammatory harangus were afterwards delivered, and the rabble separated shortly

A frightful accident occurred on board the Princeton United States frigate during a pleasure excursion, and when the President and nearly 200 guests were on board. In firing the long gun it, exploded at the breach, and spread death and destruction around. Six persons were killed, some of them men of eminence.

The Namur Morter.—This stupendous and splendld trophy, taken at the siege of Namur by the Army under Sir R. Goodricke, in the reign of William and Mary, and which was exhibited in the Armoury at the Tower previous to the fire, when the carriage was destroyed, has recently been landed at the Tower from Woolwich, where it had been sent to be refitted. It is now placed opposite the Ordnance-Office; and from its immense size, being 18-inch bore, excites much interest and attraction.

Her Majesty's Theatre opened for the season last Saturday, with Douzetti's opera of "Adelia," and a new ballet, "In Esmeralda," from Victor Hugo's "Notre ballet, "In Esmeralds," from Fictor Hugo's "Notre Dame," The opera, like many of Donisett's productions, is a conto of reminiscences and repetitions—reminiscences of other composers' ideas, and repetitions of his own. But, nevertheless, it contains some charming passages. The ballet was the great feature of the performance; and never, perhaps, was any feature more appropriately selected to ensure success to the management; has the advantage over the romance, that while it brings forward all the most beautiful and truthful parts of the story, it altogether conceals, or outs out, those which, in a moral point of view, have always been held objectionable in it. The action consists of five invicant, or scenes, each of which is characterised by ersisemblance, and by accuracy of gostume and delineation. The house was fully and fashionably attended, and the management promises a flourishing season Mr. Adams' Orrery.

*** War for the time being, and is the present case he had taken its line, and he felt justified in adhering to it. The Heat, and Galigant Officer had stated that he ought not to make any distinction in the granting of widows' pensions, because Military men of high runk had set the example, and he instanced the dust between Lord Londonderry and Mr. Battler, and also one heatween the Noble Dube, the Com. in Chief, and another noblemaries of the Com.-in-Chief hald it down that an Officer on half-pay was not amenable to Military law. In the instance of the Dube of Weilington, the dust krose out of a minunderstanding with another Moble Lord who was not in the Army, and he had never yet heard it promutgated in any Military code that an Officer to the Army was to be debarred from resenting an insult from another person not in the Army. The distinction was manifest. Had the Dube of Weilington fought with an Officer typen full pay, doubtless it would have been a strong ease. General Burton had fought an Officer spon full pay, and he was dismissed for it. The case of a Colonel of Martines had been mentioned, but it appeared that he had paimitted a series of insults to be addressed to him for several years, and a Court-Martin was held to inquire into the matter, whenghere was so much crimination and secrimination between the partnes, that one was disminsed the Service and the other put on half-pay, but not because they fill not fight. THE LATE MAJOR GENERAL SIR OCTAVIUS CAREY, C.S. AND E.C.H.

To the long catalogue of Generals recently deceased, it is our painful tank to add that of Major-General Sir Octavius Carey, who was on the Irish Staff, in command of the Cork District. He expired in London on the 13th instant, in the 44th year of his Milliary career, after a severe and protrected illness, leaving a widow and 13 shildren to deplore his loss.

In private life he was describedly held in great esteem, and professionally enjoyed the character of a hrave, meatons, and able soldier.

He was present at the siege of Seylla, in 1609, and served with distinction on the Eastern quart of Spain from February, 1612, to the close of the war in 1814.

When a Major he was selected for the command of the free corps of Calebrese, which, under his dble auperintendence, soon attained efficiency and skill as Light troops. His rigid enforcement of justice from the Officers -chiefly Italians—to the men, gained him the devoted attachment of the latter, as was gratifyingly evinged by their residences to follow and stand by him in the execution of any enterprise, however perilous, of any enterprise, however perious, Major Carey was at the taking of Alcoy, the action at Briar, bettle of Castilis, slage of Tarragons, action at Ordal, blockade of Tarragons, and also of Barcelons.

At Briar and Castilia he and his corps achieved great credit by their dexterity and courage; but it was at the

Col de Ordal that the ability of the Commander and the gallantry of his men were most eminently conspicuous.

Calabrase were sitached, being posted at Col de Ordal, was furlently attacked at midnight, on the 13th Sept. 1813, by two French columns of 10,000 men, and after a sangulary conflict of two hours, was compelled, from want of support, to retire with heavy loss in Officers and teen. Major Carey having been posted by the Commander of the Porces himself considerably to the left of the position, was completely separated from the main body of the Army, and must have been captured but for the prompti-Army, and must have been captured dut for the prompti-tude, skill, and daring with which he boldly cut his way through the rear of the French column, though with heavy loss; thereby opening his road to Vills Nova, where he pressed some vessels, embarked his weakened corps, and rejoined the Army at Tarragona, to the inexpressible surreponent the Army as Larragona, to the monpression sur-prise and satisfaction of the Commander of the Foresa, Lord William Bentinck, who had given them up as lost, and who was proportionably warm in his praise of Major Carey and his brilliant feat.

The under-mentioned incident is too creditable to Lieut. Colonel Carey, when in command of the 57th Regiment,

ife arrived with the regiment off Chatham, from Ireland, on a day when the Duke of York was reviewing the Garrisen, and received orders for its immediate debarkation and presence on the reviewing ground. Although quite unconscious of what was going on, the regiment appeared before the Commander-in-Chief in as cleen a state, and in as fine order, as any corps in the field, and chicked from His Royal Highness the expression of his admiration and warmest thanks.

During the review, the Adjt.-General endeavoured to draw the Duke's attention to one of the regiments, as being a particularly the body of mon, in a state of high desiphine; on which Mis Royal Highness remarked, "It is true, but I cannot take my eyes off the 57th; its condition is quite surprising, when you reflect that it hesqualy just incided from the transports. I have never witnessed last land anything more creditable to a Commanding Officer and bis regiment."

The circumstance made a lasting impression on the Delte's mind, who often adverted to it in terms of hearty

The late King, appreciating the Major-General's vices, honoured him with the appointment of K.C.H., of the Hanoverlan Order.

The following are the dates of Major-General Carey's respective Commissions:—Knaign, March. 1801; Lieux., 5th June, 1801; Capt., 27th Aug., 1804; Major, 2d Nov., 1809; Lieux.-Coh., 30th Sept., 1811; Col., 27th May, 1825; and Major-General of the Jan., 1837.

THE LATE LIEUT.-COL. WILLIAM GROVE WHITE, C.S.

Thus Officer died or Sunday, the 3d inst., et Newton College, Swanage, Dorsetshire, aged 66 years. He en-tered the Service in April, 1795, and was appointed Engign, by purchase, in a corpa thes raising by the Hon. Colonel Wards; and in August was remarked to the 48th Reg., in which he was shortly afterwards promoted to a Lieutenancy. In November of the same year be sailed for the West Indies, with the expedition under Sir Ralph Aber-crombie, and Admiral Sir Hugh Christian. He was at the capture of St. Lucia, and suffered severely from the fatigues of service and the nonlous influence of the nutions of service and the notions induced of the climate, until the year 1797, when the regiment being reduced to a skeleton, he returned with it to England. On the 48th being recruited, in 1798, he accompanied it to Clibraiter, and aubsequently in the expedition up the Mediterransan, when he assisted at the taking of Malta, and in 1882 was sent to England with the limited service men of his corps, preparatory to their discharge. A few months after the regiment followed, and receiving reinforcements from the Army of Reserve, was formed into two battalions, to the second of which this Officer was appointed Paymester; but he relinquished that office on his promotion to a company in 1804; and in 1865 joined the 1st Battelion, under orders for Gibraltar, where he continued till 1809; and for the last 15 months acted as Town Major of that Garrison, and part of the time previously, as Aide-de-Comp to Lieut.-Gen. Drummond, then is command. Dering the above interval this Officer, in conjunction with the then Captain Hailey, of the 10th Foot, raised, under the saustion of Lieut.General Drummond, 300 men and upwards, who were transferred to the regiment of Mearon by order of Hia late Royal Highness the Duke of York. In 1809, he joined, the Army under the Duke of Wellington, with which he actively co-operated during the transactions in which he actively co-operated during the transactions in the Penincula, except at short periods, when severe illness, contracted on service, obtiged him to repair to Engined for the benefit of his health. He was promoted to his Majority in 1809. He commanded the 48th Regi-ment, in the bettles of Vittoria and the Pyrenees; in the latter of which his herse was shot under him, and he himself, was wounded in the leg and dangerously in the riba; from the alliests of which, together with a former wound in the head, he insfered at times both mentally and wound in the near, no suffered at times both mentally and bodily. He was premieted to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel on the 26th August, 1813. He returned from the south of France in 1814 with the 48th Reg. In 1817 he was appointed to the command of the Consolidated Depots at Centerbury. In December, 1623, he was appointed to the command of the 95th Reg., which he accompanied from Scotland to Gibralter. He was a Companion of the Both. He seld out in 1526, retaining his Army Rank.

Credit given for half the amount of the first five Annual Premiums, by which means Amuraness may be effected with the least; possible present outlay, and after payment of the arrears, the Policy holder will become suitiled to participate in the entire print of this Institution, precisely in the came manner as if he had paid the whole amount of his Premiums in advance in the usual way.

Thus, for example—a person in the twenty-fifth year of his age, instead of paying 2l. de, per annum for an Assurance of 1001, would be required to pay 1l. 2s. only during the first five years, when, on payment of the arrears of Premium, amounting to 5l. 1se, his share of the Prefits would be such as to redece his intere Annual Fremiums to very little more than the half Premium of 1l. 2s. originally paid by him. The Genza Entratu is the only Mutsal Assurance Society in which this very great accommodation is given to the Assured.

Credit allowed for the whole of the first five Annual Premiums, on anti-factory security being given for the payment of the same at the expiration of five years.

All the profits of the Institution divided emmunily among the Policy holders who shall have paid fly Annual Premiums.

Full particulars are detailed in the Prospeciou, which, with every requisite information, may be obtained by application to A. R. Isvira, Manuging Director.

This Institution is empoywered by a special Act of Parliament, and is so constituted as to afford the benefits of Life Ansurance, in their failure and aconstituted as to afford the benefits of Life Ansurance facilities and aconstituted then are negally effected by other companies. The desides superiority of its plan, and its claim to public preference and support, here been proved, leach test of public preference and support, here been proved, leach test over Lawrences may either be effected by Parties on their own Liven, or by Farties interested therein in the Lives of others.

The effect of an Austreance on a person's even life is to greate at once a Papperty in Eavention, which can by up other means be resided. Take, for instance, the case of a person, at this age of Talrity, who, by the payment of Al. 2s. 4d. by the Erizancia Life Assarance Codestay, can become at once possessed of a bequenthable property, assemblings to 1,000s, subject only to the cumultion of his continuing the same payment quarterly, during the remainder of his life—a condition which may be fulfilled by the mere saving of Eight Shillings weekly in his expenditure. Thus, by the carriton of a very slight degree of evonump—such, indeed, as one control of a very slight degree of evonum-week, indeed, as can control of a life of the same inconvenience, in way at once realize a sapital of 1,000s, which he can bequesth or dispose of its proper.

In the above sustional obtablishments, as well as by many public companies and private individuals. This PROCESS preserves Timbers from DRY-ROT, and, when desired, renders it mainflammable. It is cheap, insultions, and easy of application. It may be used in ordinary wooden tanks, and does not, therefore, require hydraulic machines, except for the sake of expedition. It susmons the greenest wood in a very short time, and renders the commence, domestic timber-equal to the best foreign. CANVAS, COEDAGS, COTTON, and WOULLEN, are not only preserved from ROT, MILDEW, and the ATTACKS of MOTHS, but are quehanged in colour, and rendered even stronger than before.

Numerous apactimess and testimonials may be seen, and every information upon it collects, and application will be given, at the Company's Offices, No. as, KIRG WILLIAM STREET, LONDON BRIDGE.

The singular virtues of this successful invention for restoring, preserving, and beautifying the Human Heir, are too well known and singulated to need comment. The very facts of the high and distinguished personage it enjoys, its general use in all quantities, ingular with numerous testimonials constantly received in its favour, are authorities which stamp its superior succlience and title over all attempts of a similar nature. Being universally preferred, its consequent great demand excites the employer of a fine surface of the constantly in the investion and property of A. Rowlard and flow, and the amelgamation of its costly customerable readers abortive any attempt to discover its component parts—then proving the investion of all other article burning the title of Macassar Oil." The genuine article has the words ROWLAND'S MACASSAR Oil on the wrapper,—All others are FRAUDULENT.

A PATENT BRANDY may now be obtained in a parfectly genuine state. This quavanient arrangement for both visuous and purchases, and their muncal security against, described, is effected by the use of EETTS'S PATENT METALLIC CAPBULE, made of pure and BULLIC RETALL (not Tie Foil), which completely enciones the cork and shouth of the britle, and is unbound with the words. "BETTS'S PATENT BRANDY,", AMITHFIELD BREE," the far-simile of which is engraved on a label affixed to such bettle.

In the present day it is impossible to produce anything new and useful without axviting the capitity of imitations. Already attempts are made to mystify the identity of the original and gravines article, by faisting upon the public the contrate of bottles having a Tim Foil obverling, sheely descominated "a meat motulic capsule." J. T. BETTS & Co. therefore down it essential to impress upon purchasers the absolute necessity of compering the Embossed Capsules with the Labels, as an infullible mode of detecting francialent suchtisations.

BETTS'S RATENT BRANDY, thus protected, may be obtained of the undermentioned Wine and Spirit Merchants, at 2s. 5d. per Bottle, Bottles included; or at its, per Gelion, as herefolder, at SINGLE BOTTLE OF BETTS'S

Sin,—Your Artillery correspondent, who signs himself Hear Both Sides, must have very peculiar notions. He shows that 6000 Artillery have 42 Officers of and above the rank of Major General, and was he semantained. the rank of Mejor-General, and yet he complains that they are worse treated than $2,500 Marines, having only THER MAJOR-GENERALS. He further shows, that 46 years in the Artillery makes a man a General Officer; while I know that the same time in the RL Marines only makes him a Lieutensit-Colonel. The Marines, however, are certain that something waver be done; for the Officere at the head of their lists are too old to be efficient, and a STORMY TIME IN COMING.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sin,—The author of the "Statistics of the General Rattles in India," given in a late Number of worse ties in India," given in a late Number of your excellent Paper, has fallen into an error as regards the number engaged at the bastle of Mahidpoor, fought on the 21st of Dec., 1817, under the command of Ganeral Sir Thomas Histop, Bt. G.C.B.

He there states we lied on that day two Europeth Regiments of Intentry; the fact is, we had not even one, but only are companies of the Madras European Eag-ment, and the splendid flankers of that gullant old regi-ment the Royal Scots, making a total of seven companies of Europeans.

of Europeans.

The same mintake occurs in his number of Cavalry, which he rates as one regiment of European and three of Mative Cavalry; whereas, we had only one aquadran of H.M.'s 22d Light Dragoons, and one complete regiments of Cavalry (the 3d); the other two regiments, the 4th and 8th, had each one squadron detached in Camerick.

We had no more than six weak rags, of Native Idlantry (with few European Officers, as is always the casely vis., 3d, 6th, two Bagalions of the 14th, 15th, and four upon pages of Riffes. The Artillery consisted of two presents.

(with few European Officers, as is always the easil, vin., 3d, 6th, two Battalions of the 14th, 15th, and four power panies of Rifles. The Artifery consisted of two typepen of florse, one Rocket, and one of Foot, with twelly small six-pounders, which excited contemptatous remarks from the citizens of Ogien, as the Army filed past their getes, pompously pointing out the large ones they had in your vicinity—Holkar's Camp.

The total of our force, including the Russel Brigada, was about 5000 men, but descring the details from the different corps left at tiludia, with a number of sick three-the recruiting parties sent to the Carnatio, also detachments from the 3d, 6th, and Russel Brigade last in the pieces, from Nagpoor, adding also Afry men from each regulator sent to the rear on the morning of the hattle, he present the baggage and rearrguard—the force antickly then into action did not amount to more than 4000 men.

With this small force we had to combat flolkar's numerous Army of 28,000 men, consisting of 10,000 of his own Cavairy (allowed to be the best in India), 3000 of Ameers Khan Ogatingent and 4000 Pindaress, 5000 Infantry and matchinek men, with seventy heavy guns, manned by upwards of 2000 excellent Artillerymen, many of whom had formerly been in our Bengal Gilaudeuse, and discharged in 160f.

Bo reduced was our Army from the above causes, that, a few days before the battle, for Thomas Hisley inspected and discharged in 1806.

So reduced was our Army from the above causes, that, a few days before the battle, Sir Thomas Hislog inspected the force, when such was the senall number mustered, especially of Kuropeans, that he heatstated to attack Helkar, until reinforced by the Bombay Division, under General, Sir Keir Grant. But assing the great danger of allowing so large an Army, with a powprist Artillery, then de full march, to join the Pelahwa, and the Rajah of Betar, in the Docan,—both of whom were in open war with the British, and if they had effected a junction, might have endangered the empire of India, he wisely resolved to attack them, which was slowed.

The result was a most complete victory, in the total defeat of his Army in a strong position, and defended by 70 guas; capturing the whole of his atending camp, &c. &c., indicting on them a loss of near 5000 men a pursuing them a ing on them a loss of pair 5000 men; pursuing them a few days after to Mundaspor, where Holkar was obliged to sue for peace, which was granted; and it may be said that the second Mahratta war was in nonsequence brought to an end.

Ilultar had a powerful Artillery in a position of great strength, behind the river Snopra, in the face of which our Army had to cross, under a well-directed and destruc-tive fire of chain, double-headed, round, and grape-shot; which, in less than half an hoos, eiteneed and dismantial our battery of 14 guns. Many corps andered severely in the assault; the four cos. of Rifles lost 140 men. The enemy, in fact, fought with determined brevery, serving their guns until out down and bayoneted.

The Cavalry behaved with much boldness in the early part of the action, crossing the river, memoring our right fisht, and attacking our heritage and refrequent, but were soon driven across, with spine loss, by Light Infantry, supported with Cavelry.

Considering the unpresentated panelty of only two troops of Dragoons, and stress companies of Europeans, that were engaged at Mahlagan, where, with a small feroe of 4000 men and 20 light gunst they attacked and totally routed an Army of 28,000, in a finding of great atrength, right defended by 70 heavy places of Artillery, and sustaining a loss of 778 killed and manualed, including 38 European Officers: so severe whee the woman, being, with austaining a loss of 778 killed and seemed, according 38 European Officers; so again what the seemed, being, with few exceptions, all grape and common what, that five of the wounded Officers died a few days after to the Field Hospital, and nearly 200 men subsequently should the same fate. From the official accounts published of the several general battles in India, this appears to fine several general battles in India, this appears to fine several con of the several, excepting Assystant

SATURDAY, MARCH 23, 1844.

Ir is with feelings of the greatest regret and sorraw that we have to aunounce the densige of that truly great and excellent Monarch, Charles John, King of Sweden, which took place at Stockholm on the 8th inst. Although his advanced age and increasing infirmities might have prepared us for the event, we no less deplore it, as depriving Europe, and all the civilised world, of one of the brightest examples to be found in history, of the combination of the bighest Military courses and skill, with all the virtues that can adorn the throne of a patriot Prince

His early Military career forms a part of the his of the French Revolution, where, amidet all those who die of the French resources in the career of arms, he was second to nous; while he had the rare merit of pe through all the socials of garnage and rapine, with also hands and unsuffled nonliner.

We have it from an Officer who served on his personal staff, that Bernadotta win almost idolised by these about him, and with whom he was in daily communication; while the soldiers lossing up to him as a leader and protector, with the greatest descition.

His abilities as an administrator were no less conspicuous than his Military talents; the wisdom and prudence shown in the government of Henover caused the Sweden to cast their ayes towards him, under the mis-fortunes that had benilentheir own kingly race, to form a new dynasty. Adopted as Cenwn Prince, he at once made Sweden his country, and by the simplest means gained the hearts of all those who were to be his future subjects. His name had acquired no less influence in Europe gannerally than in his adopted country. While the nations of the north were rising to free themselves from the guiling yoke of France, the hopes that arose in this country, bright as they appeared, were occasionally dimined by the adherence of the Orown Prince at once removed all doubte, and "nesure and became doubly sure." Of the many faults enmanticle by Napoleon, none perhaps did him greater injury then that of driving his former companion in arms to the gattemity of going to war with his countrymen.

How he conducted himself in his difficult and arduous tack, we have shown on a former occasion. Contrary to the advice of one of the most relebrated Generals of any age (Moreau), but couldent in the soundness of his own indement, he at once covered Sweden, and kept in check the hogtile forger that nearly encompared him; and, when the time was sipe, gained the battles of Gross Bosres and Dennewitz, which were the immediate precursors of the grand struggle at Laipeic, where the Prince was also among the frombatants, and where the knowledge of his being immediately in their front, was no doubt one of the strongest inducements to the defection of the Secon Amy from the standards of Napoleon.

Returned to his adopted country after the war, the Crown Prince studied with no less neal the arts of pee in arder to render him worthy of the grown, which de seended to him by adoption in 1816, and, after the acces sion, gave up his lime to the welfers of his subjects, the encouragement of the arts and leteness; and all those pursuits that best become a uniquesh. His history reflects honour on Bearn, the place of his birth; and Sweden will be proud to enrol his mans in her annals. umongst the foremost of her warriors and statesmen.

The latter have the Savetege corvette, said to be of 1000 tons, sexued with only 18 guns, "but of such weight of mettle?" and carrying 300 men. The conversion of an old 38 of 1000 tone into a 24-gun or 26 corwite, and proportionably masted, would be out-Jonathan-

From the superior 50-gun frigutes which the small-class 74's have made, it would be desirable to see the remainder of the "forty thisupe" operaried into trusty men-of-wer, et all at once, but for the sake of economy and conveman, one to be engineral on the launching of every new the of battle ship. The Alfred slone, of these conversions, we believe has been found faulty in stability and salling, but which we are of opinion, would be improved if the had yards and maste apportioned to her known ca-

We have on the home station a disgraceful class of vessels, commanded by tild Licentenants, such as the Reven and Specify cutters — facetiously called the "ducks and drakes," from their natural propensity to duck their itseas under print one; and sanding the spray over their backs and talk in every third jib-brosze. Our Gazette of the 9th inst., under head " Sheerness." states that, "the Rence cutter, Lieutenant-Commander J. Stevens, ruturned here from Plymouth on Monday, having had most bolisterous weather in both passages, during which the cutter missed stays, and was almost totally under water repeatedly," The Reven is 108, the Speedy 123 tong, and such her a complement of 40 persons. These unseels could be readily replaced with the old 10gun brigs of 230 tons, under reduced maste, as when in the packet service; and if menned with 40 Officers, seamen and marines, and 20 boys, we should have on channel service, a nursery for brig seamen, the best in the Navy p and comfortable vessels for the conveyance of supernumeraries but ween the outports.

COLOREL SIR AMPREW LEITH HAY'S motion, as notified in our last Gazette, which was fixed for the 20th, was, we understand, for the convenience of Ministere; postposed till after Easter, when, we believe, it will be brought on in the form of an Address to the Crown. The matter, we have reason to think, now stands on a much more favourable footing than at any former period; and the veterans of the war of both Seri view have at laugth ground for hope that justice will be done to their unanswerable claims to an honorary decoration. The winner is, on what possible grounds it can have been so long delayed—the feeling of the country being unantment on the subject.

In reference to the late debate in the House of Con relative to Mrs. Pawcett's pension being related bec her decessed husband was killed in a deel, we will with surprised that it was not more strongly implated upon by the Secretary-at-War,-" that slibough he would have considered it his duty to have withheld a populou wife such circumstances to any one (on the ground of doing all in his power to discourage Officers in future from being engaged in similar acts), but that in the present instance it was altogether out of his power to grant a pension, as the rule laid down at the War-office, and which had been acted upon by all Secretaries-at-War for a number of years, was that widows of Officers who had sufficie means of subsistence from private resources were, walker no plea, to be sutitled to a pension from the public pension as it was well known that the autertunate lady in or tion had such resources. A pension to her was out of the question. This would have saved much time, and a great deal of uscless talk.

Whilst upon this subject we cannot help remarking, in reference to Mr. Munro's letter, which appeared in our last Gazette, that if that gentleman was so very anxious (as he now states) to avoid fighting the duel, why did he sim at his brother-in-law? for most assuredly a person, so well practised as he was in the use of the pistol, could have easily avoided hitting his antagouist if he so wished This is a complete answer to everything he has advanced

Wa have much pleasure in stating that an arrangement has been made, by which in fusure, without further en, pense to the public, but by restricting rigidly the quantity of beggage couveyed with a regiment by Railway, the wives and children of Soldiers will be carried for a very small charge, and in some cases gratultonily. The aprangement is one totally of a Regimental nature,

We have it from undoubted authority that an extension Retirement amongst the Commandants, Field Officers and Captains of the Royal Marines has been determined upon; which will give about thirty steps to the Junior Branches of that distinguished Service.

Ir is a somewhat difficult question to determine how far honours are to be limited to an Army after a visiony. The practice bitherto has not been malform. The Water Medal was conferred at all in and out of the actions; pre vided they were connected with the Hattles, or marthall of the troops in the slightest degree. Wery man regiments and Officers, who scannily heard the firing every were awarded madels. We swanish that these home should alone be conferent on those actually suggests the enemy, or under their fee is pinition. This we appear to be the attional view of the matter. It may be hard that those in charge of language. cheer, of necessity at some distance on duty-and the detached portions at a Force, should be excluded from participating in the honours were. But we hold that agree in this world must be sufferighted, to reader others distinutes; and to constibe guilertaken, to reader others firstnate; and to consti-tute gifter in the Military letting, their must be blinks.

All start fairly; and if duties be fairly taken, as they ought to be in every Army, those who are employed est of fire must take their chance—it wast be the lot of some one. This is better than conferring medals on man who, it questioned, should nonline that they were mit by the fight. It is thus that honours are depreciated. We have known many, and have board of more, who were the Waterloo Medal, and what were on the right of the position, and not in the eligiblest degree engaged. There were also some who were the many makes from the Battle and others rein advisily many utiles from the Battle, and others must, who yet found honours thrust upon them, like offe, ... The next fifty, appended to the list of retired Captains, at the additional superce per diem, would require the further amount of 43th; making the sum total 56751, per

Thus, Sir, at an additional cost to the country of less than 55001, per annum, a sum which coarcely qualifies an individual to be regarded as more than ordinarily affluent, an act of justice would be performed, the present end remote benefit of which is incalculable-a long errear of debt would be discharged to as meritorious a class of Officers as serve under the Crown—the heart of many a vertical warrier would be chesred—juniors would be encouraged to look forward with hope—and digradation, with his invariable attendent, discountent, would give place it satisfaction and joy.

If this expense seems large, the ready answer is, the claims are larger still:—and, after all, the boop would eatily be a just national compensation to the British Navy for services rendered to their country.

Fab. 27.

No one who regards with the very least possible degree of philanthropy or reflection the wall-helig and future prospects of society, can look without auxiety at car great public Schools; those which are especially open sidered the nurseries of the minds that are to take the most prominent parts in the conduct of national affairs. and establish the observer of the country for good or for evil, for shame or for reproach, before the eyes of all mankind

With those indignant feeling which are justly awakened by a recent instance of greatly on the part of youth, comes the rational inquiry. What is the system of education which brings forth such fruits of bitterness and dishonour? "Men do not gather grappe of thorns, por fire of thistles." Neither is it possible, on the other hand, that the poison one plants of cruelty and opposition should put forth, in such fearful riponess, such bideous prematurity of strength, but where they are cherished, where the soil is, in most respects, favourable to their growth, and where there are at least occasional bursts of supplies, to impart to their deadly properties their replace degrees of power and malignity.

The system, parents of Britain i (to you is this especially addressed) the system which corrodes the very heart's core of youth in our public fortheries is the Fap System. The ugly little incompiliable which, with but too much truth characteries the medera mode of youthful training, might indeed be sayify shown to substitute the germ of much of the crusity supersulous, and delusing sarvility which diagrace the imple synches of society, in sivilised and Christian Engines, had the exhibition of its various debasing influences would fill an extended essay; the present aims to be but a marning, a brief—a very brief note of carnest admonistration of it assume not too much) to those who, being slight it assume not too much) to those who, being slight. In the awfully-responsible situation of parents, are intrested, in so important and interesting a sense, with the letters destinies of their country, and possibly of the week.

Mothers of Britain I to you let it first apack—your feelings are naturally most sansitive of the treatment of your boys, when removed from the shelter of the parental roof; your hearts go with them through all the surlous trials of the new life. You know shoot of the young hearts after their home. You imagine their forment calutary feelings in the middel of the growded

It cannot be desied that, in a Military point of view, England is help-less in the estirony. About twenty-four battallons are scattered throughout England and Scotland, including those that do garrison duty at Plymouth, Portmouth, and Chatthem. The Militia have not been called out for many years, and there are as discremined, that they could and Chattiem. The Militia have not been called out for many years, and they are so disorganised, that they could not be ambodied in the case of a sudden emergency. The shife objection to the embodying of the Militia is the experse. A month's training of the Militia costs about 100,000%. What apparently is advisable is, that one third of the Militia—the Militia, vis., of Kent, Sussex, Surrey, Emser, and the counties nearest the coast and the metropolis, should be embodied, and well Officered and trained the expense of this proceeding would only amount to about 120,000. Qualification of an Irish Gentleman. — In the course of an action tried at the Galway Assizes, a question area out of the Athlone races, in which Michael Kelly, Esq. of Myrahill, was plaintiff, and William James Young Esq., Lieutenant 90th Reg., was defendant. The action was brought for the recovery of a pists, value 55L, wor by plaintiff's horse Bacchus, at the races in that town, in Sept. last, but which the defendant refused to pay Sept. last, but which the defendant refused to pay plaintiff, in consequence of an objection made by one of the riders, Mr. Moore, of Moorshall, against Mr. Kally, the rider of licebius, alleging his want of qualification, as a gentleman, to ride the race. The Jury found a wardlet for the plaintiff for the amount of the plate, and old, costs. The Galway Vindicator says, "It was proved by severa gentlemen of the highest renk in the county that they gentlemen or the nignest rank in the county that they were always happy to meet Mr. Kelly in their society, as a man of the purest integrity; and yet because Ledg Clearicardo, Mrs. Lawrence, Mrs. Blake, of Castlegrove, or Mrs. Lynch, of Moynehill, do not come in their capriages and leave their visiting cards for Mrs. Kelly, of Moynehill, Mr. Kelly, of the castlegrand of the country of the castlegrand of the castlegrand of the castlegrand of the castlegrand of the castle cas Myrehill, Mr. Kelly is not qualified as a gentleman, nor ought he to look for his just dobts. Fatal Duel in America.—Thin duel has, it is said mede as much noise, and excited as much interest, or made as much noise, and excited as much interest, on that side the Atlantic as the Fawcett and Munro affair did here:—On Thursdey, Fab. 15; Mr. Cochran said, in the presence of two or three of Mr. May's friends; that he believed Mr. May a coward. This expression of Cochran was immediately reported to Mr. May, at whose request two or three of his friends lamediately writed upon Mr. Cochran, at his room, to demand of him a primarical of the words and an analysis. apon Mr. Cochran, at his room, to deprind of him a retractation of the words, and an apology. Mr. Cochran dealined, saying that he would consult his friends, which he did. By their advice, Mr. Cochran dealded to make no apology, but, on the obstrary, accepted an invitation to meet Mr. May and his friends at eight the next morning at Mr. Nelson's tavern, about a mile or a mile and a half the other side of the chain bridge, in Fairfax county, Virginia. Mr. Cochran and his friends left Washington about half-past five on Friday morning in a coach with four white horses. They arrived upon the ground at Nelson's tavern about half an hour before the placer party. As soon as Mr. May and his friends arrived—as they did in a single couch, Dr. Miller attending on horseback—he sent a chal-lenge in the usual style to Mr. Coahran, which was accepted. Mr. Pooler sound as Mr. May's second, and Mr. Ash as Mr. Conbran's second. Mr. Conbran was also attended by his Surgeon. Articles were drawn up and signed by the seconds, designating the manner. The mode of proceeding to be with the breech officer rifle, to the shoulder—the ing to be with the breech of the rifle to the shoulder—the muzzle down—and to be refied at the word. The words, "Are you ready, gentlement.", what then to be asked. Each was to reply "Ready," said at the word "Fire!" the muzzles of the rifles were to be raised. They were then to fire between the words "said," "two," "three," "stop,"—neither before "and," nor after "attp." The seconds arrived about pithe o'clock upon the field, when the efforts to effect a recombilistical were renewed, but without affect. The distance were their measured off. All without effect. The distance was then measured off. the parties were perfectly cook and opposed. Both the principals were members of this Temperanes Society; Cochran was urged, however, to take a glass of liquor, bet Cochran was urged, however, to take a glass of liquor, but refused. Both were perfectly composed, each expecting to wound his man and escape himself unhart, and each hoped to draw the other's fire-minat is, by firing at the word "one," to anticipate the diber's fire. Mr. Cochran, as was his custom, continued to lifting little enatches of songe. Each took his place; Mr. Jah gave the word, it being his privilege as a second of the challenged party. Mr. Cochran threw off his hat. Both replied, party. Mr. Cochran threw off his hat. Both replied, party. Mr. Cochran threw off his hat. party. Mr. Cochran threw off his hat. Both replied, "Ready," in a fine clear voice, "At the word "one "both fired, Mr. Cochran a second after Mr. Riay. Mr. May remained unburt. Mr. Cochran stood a moment, his rifle dropped from his hands, and he fell heavily and slowly back, partly on his left side, the right leg being thrown over the left. Mr. Cochran's surgeon was first on the spot, "Blood was seen flowing from his ferchead, and upon pushing up the hair with the flagers, a wound was discovered through which a portion of the brain protraded about the size of two fingers. He appeared, and was at first believed to be dead. Scarcely any pulsation or breathing was perceptible. Mr. May still continued in his place for some time, but subsequently went to the place where his second had stood. Almost immediately after, Mr. Cochran's surgeon came to the spot. Dr. Miller ran to his assistance, and concurred in the opinion that Mr. Cochran must die in a few minutes called to Mr. May to take his horse and make his escape. Mr. May did to. His seconds came up to Mr. Cochran, and finding that he was dying ran to their carriage, which were a nearter of a mile off, and returned to the city with Dr. Miller. Mr. Cockran their carriage, which were a quarter of a mile off, and returned to the city with Dr. Miller. Mr. Coobran was then left dying upon the field, with no persons ly attendance upon him but his Surgeon and second, which was deeply affected by the fall of his friend. The driver of the coach and four which horses, frightened at the fall of Mr. Cochran, had suddenly driven off to the distance of half a nice, but was brought back, and in the course of half an hour blankets were procured, and Cochran was removed to his coach. In taking him to Nelson Tavern. Cochran venited several bloom, and revived i little, his pulse becoming more persontials. He was persontly sunscless—bled profundly, disambling the seats of the coach with his blood. Miller to explace the portrading brain. The hair was fained impossible to restore the brain, and it was removed off in the ricialty of the wound, but it was fained impossible to restore the brain, and it was removed, and a bandage applied. The shots were exclanated about a quarter past along o'clock on Friday, if the life. From that time till half-past four o'clock on the fallowing sould morning he remained perfectly insensible, and at that hour died. The injury to the bones of the head was of a popular and striking character, and it desims remarkable that he should have lived so long as he did. The direction taken by the ball proves that he was taking aim when he redelved the wound. The corpse with removed to the city on the 18th, and was buried the next morning. Mr. May returned hastly to the city, took the horse of his brother, Dr. R. Mey, and fled from Washington. The seconds on both sides also fied, and noke of them have been cince heard or publicly. There has been great excitament, originating from the youth of the parities engaged in the deel, and ought to have been prevented.

Swapan, Steekhelm, March 8.—It is our painful duty this day to sanounce the death of His Mejesty King Charles XIV., John, which took plees this afternoon at four a glock. His Majesty King Oscar I. has, by a proclamation, declared that he has assended the thrones of Sweden and Norway, and that he will rule over the two kingdoms in conformity with their adopted constitution.

The official assensement in the State Gasette of the 8th instant is in the following terms:—"The most powerful King of Sweden and Norway, of the Goths and Wonds.

fel King of Sweden and Mosway, of the Goths and Wends, Charles XIV. John, died tranguilly this afternoon, Friday, March S, at half-past three, after a protracted illness, to the deep sorrow and irreparable loss of our now Most gracious King; of Her Majesty the Queen, Her Majesty the Queen Doweger, their Royal Highnesses the Prince Royal, the hereditary Prince, and all other Princes and Princesses of the Boyal House, and finally of all his faithful and loving subjects. One new Triguing King, Quear I., of Sweden and Norway, of the Goths and Wends, immediately issued and signed in presence of the Council of State his Royal proclamation, after which the members of Privy Council, the Generals of the Carrison, the great Officers of the household, the chief justices, and other high dignituries of State, took their oath of sliegiance in person."

The reading of the proclamation was everywhere followed by leng and repeated exclamations of vivats to King Occas. At two calcox the place garrison paraded in the palace-yard, where His Majesty and the Duke of Upland appeared on horseback, and received from every regiment separately the oath of allogiance. He addressed the troops, and was enswered with the most enthusiastic acclaimations and wise. The Navy has also taken the oath of allegiance. Employment of Natices, ... Mr. Sullivan presented petition, signed by a great number of most respectable natives, resident at Calcutta, complaining that they were excluded from helding respectable offices in the civil or the Company, contrary to the express provision of the last Charter Act, which set forth that neither religion; place of birth, descent, nor colour, should be considered as a disqualification from holding any civil office under the Company. The petitioners admitted that since the passing of that act considerable improvement had taken place in the system, but still they felt that the intention of the Imperial Parliament had not yet been fairly carried out. Natives were now to be found perfacily fit for executing the duties of various civil officer, but they were stoluded in favour of Europeans. The pt-titioners therefore prayed that all restrictions might be removed, and that the intentions of the Legislature should be fairly carried into effect.

ORDNANOE CORFA.

Rl. Artillery—Lieut. Domville, in command of the detachment at Hondurse, is ordered to be relieved on the arrival of the expected co., and Lieut. Connell is named to go there.—On Thursday morning the whole of the Royal Artillery in the garrison at Woolwich were assembled on the guard-mounting sparade ground, at eight o'clock, to witness the remaining part of the sentence car-ried into effect upon gunner and driver Davis, of the 6th batt., who recently received corporeal punishment for atrailing a corpopean, value 51., the property of Lieut.-Col. Colquhoun. The prisoner was brought out by a file of the guard, and the sentence of the Court-Martial held upon him read to the whole of the assembled troops, and, in terms of its conclusion, that the prisoner be duchurged from the regt. with ignominy, his focuse and ornaments were stripped off his olofices, and he was drummed out of the garrison. A company under Captain Tireman, 4 Officers and 78 men, embarked at Dublin this week, for Liverpool, en route to Woolwich, being relieved by Capt.

Office of Orthunge, ist March, 1844.—The Master General and floard, having reason to believe that, in the instances which sometimes occur of application for an exchange of situations in the Orthunge Department, it is not sufficiently understood that, according to the rules of the Service, all expenses of whatever kind that may attend anoth Engineers, when acceded to by the Master General and Board, must be exclusively burne by the parties themselves; the Master General and Board, in order that this point may be duly kept in view, have directed it to be explained to the Heads of Departments, and to the respective Officers and Barrack Masters in the Ordnance Service, for their own guidance, and for communication to those employed under Officers and Barrack Massers in the Ordinaire Service, for their own guidance, and for communication to those employed under them, that, in the event of any exchange of situations being hereafter sanctioned by the Master General and Board, at the request, or for the personal nunvenience of the parties, no expense, whether for travelling or otherwise, will be admitted as a charge against the public.—By Order of the Master General and Board, 1at Foot, 2nd Butt.—The wing of this fine regi ment arrived at Queben on Sunday night, in the Uni-corn, from Cape Chat, where they left the transport Premier, in which they had embacked for the West Indies, nearly a total wreck. On Wednesday, Nov. 29, the regiment marched to the cathedral, and there one and all unsted in returning thanks for their late preservation, to Him who is alone able to save. Part of the service was sung and chaunted by the excellent chair composed of men of the regiment, who have been so ably instructed by Lieut. Whitmore; and we are happy to learn, that, by permission of Alajor Bennett, the men will, during the time they may be quartered in Quebec, unnist on Sundays at the cathedest, as they were in the habit of doing in the upper province, and their singing in the dburches of that province has been deservedly re-marked as very fine. The Bishop presched an excellent and impressive sermon, taking for his text Pealin exvi. 12.14; and took occasion to allied to the good conduct of the Royals during the late disturbances in this prevince; and how much, under Providence, we ought to feel industed to them. It was truly plusting to notice the attention evenced by the Officers and men to the solemn services of the day .- Quebes Gaustia, 13th—See our Leading Remarks.

30th—An inquest was held on Monday at the Military Barrack, before Mr. H. E. Jones, Coroner, on the body of a private soldier of the 30th, named Edward Gower, who cause by his death under the following circumstances:---It appeared from the evidence that the deceased and a private of the same regiment, named Slowey, were tossing for halfpence in the Barrack-room, on Friday evening, between 5 and 6 o'clock; a dispute arose about the winnings, when blowey atruck deceased; a sculle ensured, and two or three rounds were fought. The decessed was described as having fought with head down, when he received a blow on the nose which bled it, and said he would fight no more; he also said Slowey was a coward. Deceased soon after became very ill, and went to bed and vomited. The next morning (Saturday) he was found speechless, and was conveyed to the Military Hospital, where he died at 2 o'clock that day. A post mortem examination was made on Sunday by the Surgeon of the reg., who found a fracture on the left temporal bone, and an extravasation of blood on the left hemisphere of the brain, which had caused his death. The Jary, after hearing the evidence, returned a verdict "that the deceased died in consequence of a mortal wound inflicted by Slowey on Friday, the 5th inst, of which he languished and died on Saturday, the 16th inst., at the Military Hospital in the borough of Cork atoresaid." Slowey has been committed.—Cork Constitution.
40th—Ensign E. George Lane, a native of Clonmel, who carried the regimental column at Gwallor, excaped unburt. This gentleman is son of the late Lieut. Lane, Barrackmaster of that town, who served with distinction in the Peninsular War and lost an arm at Waterloo.

We have been favoured with the following extract of a latter from a N.C. Officer in India to his friend at home, which, as it contains a nominal list of the killed and wounded of the 10th Regiment, we publish for the information of these more immediately connected with that gallant corps :-

"Camp, near Gwalior .-- "My Dear Bing our joint thanks for the many newspapers you have forwarded, I hasten to give you a detail of the rather severe affair we have been engaged in.

"Having been ordered to join the Army of Exercise, we left Mearut on the 20th Nov., and on the 3d Dec. arrived at Agra, a place of great antiquity and Oriental splandour. Our encampment, when assembled all together, was rather estensive, as we mustered somewhere about 2500 men. Our worthy Colonel-Maj, Gen. Valiant-was there before us, and, on inspecting us the day after arrival, congratulated us upon meeting after the toils and dangers of Afighanistan, and feelingly alluded to the merial ere long to be suspended from our breasts—regretted exceedingly he was not with us in person-but was satisfied we were sensible that, though absent in person, his heart was with us. On the 12th Dec. inc Army left Agra, crossed the Chimbue River on the 22d, entering the Mahratta country complete on the 26th. On the 29th, after a march of about six miles, we came up with the enemy, being between 8 and 9 A.M., and a warm affair it turned outlar close work, and no hesitation about it, I assure you; had no time for ceremony. The enemy had 56 pieces of cannon, and well-manned; served with deadly precision, their montents were awfully felt by our force, particularly the 39th, 2d N.I., 56th N.I., 16th N.I., and conrecives; and it was only when we reahed torward, and beyoneted every men at the guns, that their fire ceased. Our regiment captured 22 guns and 5 colours, and lest, not least—that is, in our Drum-Major's estimation —a copper drum, apparently of French manufacture.
We had on this day three Commanding Officers—
Major Stopford, wounded in the side, and his horse shot;
next Captain Coddington, who shortly after received a next captain Country on, who shortly after received a severe sabre set, which we were fearful at first would prove inectal, but I am happy to say there is now hopes of his recovery; Captain Oliver next took command, and brought the regiment out of the field.

To the Editor of the Rusal and Hillery Gazette.

Sen,—In the Neval and Military Gazette of the 23d lest, you state there is every probability of an extensive promotion taking place very shortly in the corps or re-Marines. It is certainly time that something was to tion taking place very shortly in the corps of Royal Marines. It is corressly time that summing were utune, for they are the most ill-used body of men in Her Majesty's Service. Why should they not be put upon the same footing as the Royal Artillery? A certain number of Field Officers should be ordered to retire on full-pay every year—say one from each distinon—and the Commandants to cettre every five years; this would give general satisfaction, and make the corps more effec-tive, besides giving the Junior Officers a hope of getting unfit for active Service, and their zoul all but exhausted by neglect and disappointment. There has not been a vacancy for the last eight months, nor is there a chance of any, unless the authorities think proper to fill up the there are several sho can searchly keep their seat on the chart heing left open, the Officers next for presention sea deprived of rank and pay. Account the Field Officers there are several sho can searchly keep their seat on burnaback, merely from uge, "and they are often seen to diamount in the presence of the battalion," I wish to wak, diamount in the presence of the battalion." I wish to sak, why should not these defenders of their country be rewarded for their past sorvices, and be allowed to retire from the Service, and end their days in peace and comfort? Under the present system of promusion, by the time an Officer gets his Linutenau-Colongley he is two old for active duty; consequently, it say elementanes should coper to cell a bettaken abroad-which is not unlikely-there is scarcely a Pield Officer fit to take

In conclusion let me, ask, why the present vacant retirements are not filled up? If the Senior Officers will not take them, go down the list, and there will be many found most thankful for the chance.

To the Editor of the Narol and Military Guzelte.

Sin,-it was with the atmost setonishment that I read in the Standard of the 13th last, the reply which the Secretary-ut-War is reported to have made to a question put by Mr. Gill. Member for Plymouth, relative Officers of the 76th Reg., who have been in arrest since the 14th July last. I am intimate with several of the Off ers of that reg., and have had abundant means of ascertaining every circumstants sommetted with the arrest of the Officers alluded to, and I must say, if the spread of the Secretary-at-War be correctly reported (with I can acarriely believe to be the mass), that no Member of Par-liament ever made a more unfair statement in his place in the House, than that Right Hon. Gentleman did on thu occusion. It is portectly true that the Officers were placed under arrest, in consequence of a quarrel which accurred after mees, and "to prevent further consequences;" I ask the Scoretary-at-War, whither he is not well aware that it was not in consequence of the "Juntor Officer conveying a challenge to bis Schor Officer, and of the Schor Officer accepting it," that those Officers have been kept in arrest for the extraordisary period of eight months; and further, that no challenge some conveyed, and, quently, none could have been accepted. The Duke of Willington well knows that he blame whetever can be imputed to the senior of them two Officers; and that he can placed in accept merely to prevent what would other wise appear to be the inevitable consequence of the insult which the juntor had offered him, when saking an expla-mation of an expression which he (the Benter Officer) had said to a third Officer, not then present. The simple asking of an explanation, cartainly, cannot be saided converying a challenge, as the explanation may prove perfectly estimatory. Sir Henry Mandings either stated to the House that which he knew to be supervect, or he attempted to give an explanation of siroumstances, of which I-e wa completely ignorant. He may choose whichever been of the ddemma he pleases.

But even after I had read the extraordinary misstate ment which the reporters have secribed to Sir H. Hardings, I was utterly unprepared for the startling announce-their companies a few years sooner than they would meat (in his reply to a question from Capt. Bernal) that under the present system. It is well known that there is an Officer might be kept in arrent for any length of time are between thirty and forty of these tried veterana, quite be the Commander-in-Chief, or by his Commanding "an Officer might be kept in arrest for any length of time by the Commander-in-Chief, or by his Commanding Officer." If such were the case. I sak who mailed If such were the case, I sak, who would enter the Army, who could procure a livelihood in any other

When a person becomes an Officer, does be less the rights of a British subject, and barter away the privileges of which Britons have such good reason to be proud? Far from it. If the Scoretary at War had read the 59th and 107th Articles of War, he would have known that, by his arbitrary and unconstitutional act, the Duke of Wollington himself is, according to the letter and spirit of the law.
I liable to be easkiered." The unches (and the only one allowed by the 107th Article of War, for knoping Officer or soldier to confinement more than eight days in that a Court-Martial could not be conveniently assembled; but in the present instance that plea sompletely, falls to the ground. I have been in Plymouth and Exster frequantly, and have known several regiments quartered in those garrisons, and I wall know that there are sivays Officers enough doing duty there to form at least three General Courts-Martial. There were only two settlesses. of the occurrence which caused the arrest of the two Othcare in question, and they were both in Devouport for at three mouths after these Officers were first unde prisoners. Where, them, was the inconventuos of assembling a Court-Martial? It will be observed, that the plain meaning of the 197th Article of War is, so protrut those serving in the Army from unnecessary coffinement previous to trial (the law supposing them innount convicted), and also to prevent offenders escaping punishment, under of counstances in which it might be impossible to essemble a Court-Martial without considerable delay. It would appear from the statement of Mr. Gill, and the schnowledgment of Sir II. Hardings, that several applications have been made on the part of one of the Officers to the Commander-in-Chief, requesting that he might either be released or brought to trul, but that those applications have not had the desired effect. It is monetrous that any one should unnecessarily be kept a prisoner untried for eight months, although frequently demanding that justice to which every littleb enbject is entitled. But fibe is that injustice enhanced, if the person entitled. But flow is that injustice enhanced, if the person thus confined prive innocent when finally brought to trial by his person? No person in theorem legally possesses the treatment of the person to the trial by his person. Duke of Wellington has in this inse assumed; and I am very much mistaken if a jury in would not award the Officer, who has of his countryme of his constraint women not award the Univer, who has in vain applied for his release or trial, such damages as would convince the Army, and the country in general, that even the Duke of Wellington, great Commander and Statesman as he has vertainly been, cannot with impunity be guilty of injustice to may fellow-autient, no matter how humble in station or devoid of interest or power he may happen to be. Such a belief in the justice of the lumi it was sesential should be instilled toth the monds of all, and particularly of the Army; and this feeling has been inconsiderable degree instrumental to resting this great country to the station which it now occupies unong the nations of the world.

Your unrealitting exertions to produce justice for all classes in the Navy and Army, induce me to hope you will give meetion to this letter in your valuable Paper. -am, &c.,

Dublin, March 220 19th - The Square of the Highlanders at To April 10, 1814. From the Note Book of Capt. John Ford, Royal Hospital, Chalsen .- I nough the square formed by the 79th Highlanders in the valley of the Ers, near Tou-louse, is mentioned by French Military writers, and is laid down in their plans, yet I am not swere that the particulars have been given in any British publication or officontains have even given in any oritino publication or offi-cial letter: I may therefore, be excused copying from mg, notes a few words respecting it. The Sixth Division, commanded by Sir Henry Chuton, of which the 79th Regiment formed a part, crossed,the bridge over the Era at Croix d'Aurade, but did not austain so much loss from the fire of the redoubt des Augustine on the Platent de Calcinet when advancing along the valley, as the Fourth Division which had preceded it. After passing and getting out of the range of the game of the above-mentioned redoubt, the 79th was on the right of the division in the valley, between the Plateau de Calvinet in popula-aton of the enemy, and the little river Ers; while so situated a curps of French Cavalry unaspectedly appeared, debouching in slow time by one of the deep farm roads which cross the plateau, with the intention, so doubt, of actacking as if not prepared to receive thom, of turning the right of the two divisions, or of outting off their communication with the bridge which we had passed, the only one oger the Ere not destroyed by the enemy. settion of the 79th was, therefore, a very important con-Lieut. Col. Neil Douglas (ormanding) lumedistriy formed square, ordered out Ensign Balfour to the front with one of the colours, and gave the word," march."
Helfour's conduct was much admired; he cargied himself quite erect, the colours inclined forward-which, as be had no shoulder or waist-belt to support them, required strength of arm-pointed his toes, and gave the step to the square with as much regularity and correctness as he would have done at any formal parade in England. The view of the two corps advancing in slow time to meet each other must have been a very interesting sight, as seen from the high ground which the French held possession of. When the square had arrived sufficiently near, Lieut,-Col. Douglas halted it, called in Balfour, and ordered the grandiers to give the enemy a volley, upon which they wheeled round and retired as slowly as they had advanced. I believe they did not sustain any loss from our fire : certainly I did not see one man fall.

The following is a French account of the attack upon the "Carré d'Ecosonis," capied from an octavo volume, with many plats, published at Toulouse. It must apply, I think, to the 79th square, as I am not aware that the 42d, the only other regiment wearing the kilt on that side the Scotch by the attack of two mapanies of the 115° de Ligur, but he says nothing about a square.

The above extracts do not agree with the account I have given; the French author must have written the passage from an incorrect report, because though the Dragoons and Lancers in the French Service are called "Cavalerie de Ligne," they had not so many as 115 regiments of that description of force, therefore the 115° de Ligne must have been an Infautry regiment. The threat-ened attack upon the 79th square was made by Cavairy. On the morning of the Battle of Toulouse, the 79th had only 414 rank and file present in the field, but they were veterans in every some of the word. Not a shot was fired at us when in square. It was in attacking and carrying the redoubt des Augustine that the 79th afterwards sustained such a serious loss, about one-balf of the 414 rank and file being either killed or wounded. Four of our Officers wore buried in one grave in the redoubt, and a fifth at Toulouse, and thirteen wounded.—U.S. Magazine, Apr.

G. O., No. 2s.—Head-quarters, Kingston, Jamaica, 20th Feb., 1843.—1. At a General Court-Martial, held at Up Park Camp on the 25th day of October, 1843, and continued by adjournments, and ordered to re assemble at Kingston Barracks on the 13th day of Feb, 1844. Licut. John Gagin Cox, of the 2d West India Regiment, was arraigned upon the full-wing Charges.—

1st Charge.—"For having on or about the 4th of October, 1843, at Fort Augusta, in the Island of Jamaica, without the authority of Lieut. Col. Nicolits, the Officer in command of the 2d W.I. Reg. and in disobedience of the orders of Captain Howell, his auperior Officer, not to permit any soldier to leave Fort Augusta without the written permission of him, Captain Howell, ordered Corporal Sam. Curr and private Tam O'Shanter, both of the above Regiment, to convey a letter on his private affairs from Fort Augusta to Port Royal."

2d Charge.—" For having at the time and place, and on the occasion atoresaid, been guilty of a wanton diaregard of the safety of the men placed under his charge, in ordering Corporal Sam. Sentence.—The Court having found the prisoner guilty of both the charges, with the exception stready stated, and the same heing in breach of the Articles of War, the Court therefore, by struct thereof, doth sentence and adjudge him the prisoner, Licuit. John Gagin Cox, of the 2d West ladia Regiment, to be publicly reprimended at anch time and place as the Major-General Commanding may think fit. (Signed) N. CARPBELL,

A.D. Advocate, Captain, 3d W.I. Reg.

Mejor-General Commanding.

2. The Major-General Commanding confirms the sentence of the Court, and directs that the prisoner, Licuit, John Gagin Cox, of the the 2d West India Regiment, by publicly reprimanded by the Deputy Arjutant-General, who will read the General Order in presence of the Officers of the 2d West India Reg., assembled for that purpose, at such time and place as shall be arranged by the Officer commanding that corps, who will be pleased to communicate with the Deputy adjutant/General on the subject. Lt. Cox is then to be released from arrest, and return to his duty. The Major-General, on persent of the proceedings of this General Court-Martial, observed, with surprise, that Lieut. Cox has, in no instance, expressed the least contrition or regret for the melancholy occurrence which followed his disobalience of orders, which line of broduct the Major-General coasides has evinced a want of proper feeling, little creditable to any fernon in the situation Lieut. Cox has been placed by his own indiscretion.

Staff-Assist.-Surgeons English and Barnett arrived at Jamaica on the 15th February, from Bpgdand, and are stationed at Up-Park Camp. Second Class Staff-Surgeon stationed at Up-Park Camp. Second Class Sinfi-Surgeon Allman, at Jameica, Ia in orders to proceed to Montage Bay on the arrival of the draft for the 77th Reg.; and Staff-Assist-Surgeon Fishbourne is to move first Montago Bay to Kingston, on being relieved by Liput. Allman.

Major-General Charles Turner appointed to the Staff of the Army in Ireland, in room of the late Maj-Gen. Sir O. Carey, who commanded Cork district, was Assist. Adj.—General at Cork from 1836 to Nov. 1841, when he was gained by Brayest to his present year.

General at Cora from 1000 to 100v. 100x, whose he was realised by Brevet to his present rank. Major-General Sir G. Berkeley, commanding at Belfast, will be isoved to Cork, and Major-General Turner succeed him at Belfast. ISLE OF WIGHT.—We are informed that the Barracks at Perkhurst have been surveyed this week, by some of the authorities from the Horse Guards, in order to ascertain if accommodation can be afforded for a troop of Horse, in the event of Her Majesty's taking up her residence at Osborne-house during the assuing summer.-

THE AUSTRIAN SERVICE.-Extract from the letter of a young English Cadet.—"I am now a Cadet in His Imperial Mejesty's 35th Foot, and a finer regiment I never saw in my life. In time of war it is 7000 strong, and has its own Brigadier, General hasides a full Calendary and has its own Brigadier-General, besides a full Colone from whom the regiment takes its name, vis., Graff Kafenhiller (Earl of Kafenhiller). Every man in Austria must serve 14 years in the regular Army, and 12 years in the Landwehr or Militia, so you may suppose what a numerous Array they have (upwards of 400,000 men), who can be called out at a moment's notice, all ready equipped and fit for service. In Hohemia you can make 50% go as far as 3001, in England, and a man with 2001, per annum is accounted rich. There are a great number of English in the Austrian Service, and as many as 12 Officers in one regiment of flussers. My uniform is a white coat, red cuffs and collar, blue trousers, with a white stripe, a sword supported by a cross-belt; but when I am on service I carry besides a sword, a bayonet, musket, &c., and knapsack, the first-mentioned weapon (sword) being the only mark by which you distinguish the Cadet from the private soldier. My father allows me 50t, per annum, which with my pay, about 5t, per annum, I live like a prince, but out of it I have to pay my soldier-servant, and to find myself in everything, so you may imagine I manage to get through a good part of it."

Maria Soames has been taken up to convey convicts to New South Wales; Emerald, freight-ship, loading with stores for Gibraltar. Brunetta loading in London Docks with stores for Trincomales; Resource loading with victualling stores for Sierra Leone.

THE PHONIX STEAMEN.—The Admiralty have ordered this frigate to be fitted with Mr. Steinman's submarine propeller, which has already been successfully tried in H.M.'s steamers' Bee and Digurf, and with new engines of 260 horse-power. The Premis is the first war-steamer fitted by the Admiralty with a screw, if we except the Rattler (200 horse-power), built for experiments, and has been placed at Mr. Steinman's disposal, in consideration of his propeller having surpassed in speed those of Mr. the Archimedean screw") and Capt. Ericsson in the late trials, conducted by the Admiralty in the Res.
The speed of the Dwerf, when tried with this same propeller at the measured mile, was 12-139 miles, which is the greatest result yet obtained by a screw.

Lord Stanley has cancelled the appointment of Com-mander Noroott, as Governor of the Gambia; the gallant Officer, however, has proceeded on to his destination but the Admiralty have despatched a vessel to recal him

The North Star, 28, Capt. Sir E. Home, was at Port Wellington, on the 20th Sept.; Capt. Home, who was injured by the falling of one of the booms, on the vessel capt. Sir J. Marshall, left the Mauritius for Madagasca on the 28th Nov. The Malabar scout, and Locust st. were lying at Gibraltar on the 16th inst. The Pilot brig, 16, Com. Jarvis, arrived at Samon's Eay, Cape of Good Hope, from Rio, on the 18th Jan., bound to China. The Winshester, Capt. C. Eden, and the Cleopatra, Capt. C.

Wyvil, were also in port.

The Helena, 16, Commander Ricketts, has arrived at Jamaica. Letters have been received from her Captain and Officers, who speak of her as a very comfortable vessel and an admirable sea-boot, and that notwithstanding the tauntness of her masts, she has great stability in the water, and is well able to carry them.

The Vesuvius, 6, at.-frigate, Commander Erasmus Ommanney, is under orders to proceed to England from the Mediterranean, and may be expected shortly.

The Albien, 90, Capt. Lockyer, is still stationed in the Tagus. Letters have been received from her Officers, which speak of her in the highest terms of praise, as one of the finest ships they ever satled in. They state, that in crossing the Bay of Biscay they had to encounter very reather, and that the vessel behaved most nobly and that, in point of speed, stability, and quickness in working and attering, no line-of-battle ship in the Service can surpade her.

The America, 50, Cant. the Hon, John Gordon, is now all atsunt, and ready for sea, at Plymouth. She has entered all her hands, 500 in number, and few ships in the Service can boast of a finer crew. It is understood she will relieve Vernost, ordered home from the Mediter-

The Bouetta, 3. Com. Brock, will shortly be ready to proceed to the Mediterranean, where she is to be employed as a surveying vessel. Com. Brock has been ployed as a surveying vessel. many years engaged surveying in that sea, when in com-mand of the Manpie, recently paid off at Chatham.

NEGLECTED PRECAUTIONS FOR SAFETY AT SEA.—
The Shipowners' Society have had the modesty to request that they may not be required to fit their vessels with the paddle-box boats, which have been found of such excel-lent service in cases of shipwreck, and without which passengers at sea can have no feeling of security. It is really a frightful thing on board of a crowded steamer, to reflect that in the event of any accident from fire, explosion, or striking, a couple of small boats, not capable of bolding a fifth perhaps of the people, are the only means of escape, and that they would be too certainly awamped by the rush into them." The paddle-box boats, being large in proportion to the size of the vessel, must be pro portioned also to the number of persons that may have need of them. In the wresks of the Isis and the Medina West India steam-packets, all were saved by the paddlebox boats. Those who escaped from the Solway owed their deliverance to the paddle-box boat, and all would in that instance have been rescued if the second boat could have been launched; but the tackle for hoisting her out was not in order, the falls not rove, and for this culpable, we may say criminal negligence, the Captain lost his life, together with many innocent sufferers. It is a remarkable fact that when the Solway was about to proceed on a voyage, a visitor, interested in the experim int of the paddle-hox boats, observed that the iron stauchlons, davits, S.c., were not in their places, and, in answer to his inquiry how it happened, was told that they had been atowed away in the hold! The Captain, perhaps, smiled at the caution exacted of him at the time—laughed at the little chance of danger; but in the horror of shipwreak how terribly he must have repented of the negligence by which so many lives were sacrificed !

The Inconstant and Ringdove salled on 22d Feb. from Jamaica, the latter for Nassau.

COURT-MARTIAL, -On Monday a Court-Martial was held on board the St. Vincent, flag-ship of Vice-Adm. Sir C. Rowley, Com-in-Chief, at Portsmouth, before Rear-Adm. Hyde Parker, C.B., President; Captains W. Willmott, Henderson, C.B.K.H. of Victory, R. F. Rowley (dag), St. Vincent; Sir T. Hastings, Excellent; and Commander R. Wilcox, of Victory; G. L. Greetham, Euq., Judge Advocate ; to try Mr. James Hand, Second Engineer of H.M.'s steam-vessel Prometheus, Lieutenant

Passo;

"For that the said Mr. James Hand, Second Class Engineer of H.M.'s steam-vessel Prometheus, did on the 27th day of Feb., 1844, while the Engineer on watch, grossly neglect his duty by having allowed the water in one of the boliers on bound the said vessel to get considerably below its proper level, and for not having taken the proper steps to arrest the methic thereby incurred, whereby the vessel was prevented from proceeding on her voyage after reaching Madeira, and which has occasioned great inconvenience to Her Majesty's Service, and rendered a considerable outlay necessary."

Four winesses were examined for the measurement.

Four witnesses were examined for the prosecutionnamely, the Commander of the vessel, Lieut. Pasco; the First Engineer, Mr. Fraser; Mr. J. Wallace, Second Master; and Mr. T. Lloyd, Chief Engineer of Woolwich Dockyard; from whose combined evidence it appeared that on the night of 27th Feb., or rather on the morning of 28th, Lieut. Pasco, being in his berth, was awoke by the stopping of the vessel, then off Madeira. On rising to inquire the cause, he discovered a strong and offensive smell issuing from the engine-room, which he found prooreded from the ignition of some felt placed, as is usual, between the two bollers. On prosecuting his inquiries further, he found that the port holler was at the time so hot as to be nearly at red heat (hence the small from the felt) consequent upon its not being authoratly supplied with water by Mr. Hand, the engineer on duty, who alleged as an excuse for his calpuple neglect, that on making the discovery he was frightened and did not know how to act. Lieut. Pasco finding the vestel so disabled, and is being impossible to get the damage repaired at Madeira, made sailefor the first British Naval port, and communicated his diseaster to Sic D. Milne, Comman in-Chief at Devenport, from whence he sailed to Portsmouth.

The evidence of the First Engineer and Second Master ras similar. Mr. T. Lloyd, Chief-Engineer at Woolwigh Dock-yard, proved the damage done to the boilers to be the result of carelessness and neglect, and, although the boilers were tubular ones, they do not require any more skill in management than common once, and gave it as his opinion that the damage done could not be repaired in less time than one month, and would cost from 300%. to 400/.

The prisoner brought two witnesses in defence, one an apprentice on board. Lieut. Pasco, also Mr. Lloyd, gave the prisoner a good character for sobriety and general attention to his duties, and also for his qualifications as a thorough engineer. The court was cleared for the consideration of the verdict, and, on re-opening, the Judge-Advocate delivered as the result of the deliberations of the Court, that the prisoner be dismissed Her Majesty's Ind Constructation of the vergicit, and, on re-opening, the Judge-Advocate delivered as the result of the deliberations of the Court, that the prisoner be dismissed Her Majesty's Service, and that he is forthwith dismissed accordingly. Prizz Monay.—To the Officers and company of Her Majesty's brigantine Fasse, who are smittled to share for the capture of the Portuguese brigantine Box Harmonia, on 18th March, 1943, a distribution of the bounty-money and tonings-bounty granted for the said capture, will be made at No. 22, Norfolk, st., Strand, on 18th April next; and the shares upt then claimed will be recalled at the same piace, agreeably to Act of Parliament. SUMMER DREAS OF THE TROOPS.

Sir.—We are aware that, to some minds, "di novello they be this remark to the recent design of a Hat for the lafantry, it does not appear so certain that it will offer a sefficient appley for the proposed alteration in the summer dress of think Lard R. himself eight to be setleful.

of the troops, -that is, of the Non-Com. Officers and privates of Cavalry and Infantry. Surely no substituted navelty will ever bear comparison with the sleap and soldierlike aspect of the ranks, when Officers and men are attired in white trousers. Scarcely any juxtaposition of colours could produce so brilliant and lively an effect as colours could produce so brilliant and lively an effect as that of red, or scarlet and white; and we believe that every soldier in the United Kingdom (Non-Com. Officer or private) would prefer having to pay a trifle in excess of the regular washing charge to being compelled to discontinue an article of dress which he feels is so advantageous to his appearance. Sir, there is personal prida in a fiddier; and there should be. He is neither a worse workto his appearance. Sir, there is personal prime in a undier; and there should be. He is neither a worse working man, her a more lax disciplinarian because he is neat in his tests, and perhaps likes to be somewhat amert in his dress. This is one of his few privileges, and it seems hard to deprive him of it. We trust that a measure, which we feel assured would cause general dissatisfaction, may be allowed a careful consideration before the stamp of authority legitimines its adoption. BRITISH NAVAL CO-OPERATION AT RILHAO.

To the Editor of the Nevel and Military Guestie.

Six,—A letter from my Lord Ranelagh having appeared in the Stilledard newspaper, in which, smongst other matter relating to Don Carlos, he has stated circumnature resisting to Jun Carton, he has attain orrestings attances connected with the part taken by Her Majesty's Naval force in the river, during the investment and subsequent siege of Bilbao, which are not borns out by facts, and which would lead to an erroneous impression that H.M.'s ships had acted surreptitiously and consequently dishenourably in the part they took during those operations, I beg leave to be permitted, as an Officer of the force employed on this occasion, to vindicate the Officers of the Navy from soting in any way unbecoming their characters for open manly dealing with the foe on this as well as any other occasion, and to assure you, for the astisfaction of the English public,—who I hope would be alive to the honour of H.M.'s Naval Service—that the Officers and ships' companies of the men-of-war in the river were epenly and actively engaged in co-operating with the Army under Espartero during the many weeks the operations for the relief of that unfortunate city were being carried on : and though, from the nature and localities of some of those operations, the vessels' broadsides could not be used, their respective crows were employed on shore with the Army, or in rendering the Convent defensible in once of attack, in constructing betteries (in one of which the carpenter of the Ringdove was killed by a cannon-abot) at points most assailable, and in landing guns, ammunition, &c. &c. The object of these proceedings at the Convent being that, in the event of the ships being fired upon from the heights from masked batteries, which we were constantly told were con structing for our destruction, and to which our guns could not have replied, the elevation being too great, we were to allp and run up the river (that is the Ringdove) to the Saracen's anchorage under the Convent, and if obliged, to throw the ships' companies into the Convent which we had fortified, and defend it to the last; these were the intentions of the Senior Officer, and I mention them briefly, to prove to you that we were not idle spectators, or acting an underhand part, but actively sugaged in affording every assistance to the cause we were ordered to sepouse; and though, as I have before mentioned-and which may account for the error into which Lord Ranelagh has fallen in this respect—it was impossible to use our guns on board, yet some of them were landed and placed in position on shore, and used these. The position of the Ringdove in the river, was about midway be tween Portuguiste and Mount Aspis, and at least three miles below the Banderas or the Cepuchine, the outermost or lewest outpests taken by the Carlists, near the river. The Saracen was moored has and stern under the Couvent, a mile and a half higher up the river than the position occupied by Ringdows, and immediately opposite Mount Aspin, a Ringdoes, and immediately opposite Mount Aspin, a position often taken up by deputory parties of Carliets, to fire upon those ascending or descending the river, and which they were not slow to do on our busts, whenever which they were not slow to do on our busts, whenever opportunity offered; upon this point the Saracen's guns were not unfraquently turned to clear the pass, and with such effect that her name was held in terror. The Comet, steamer, was employed in various ways useful to the Army. Thus, I believe, I have made it clear that the ships of Her Majesty were not acting chandestinely, dishonourably, or quiescently, and if further proof were wanting of the part that those device the three last days of the slope in nartiseeing that his Lordship in person most gallantly main-tained his post there till deserted by the troops around him. On the policy pursued by our Government in tota interference I give no opinion; it is sufficient that we were obeying our orders without considering the morits or demonits of the question.- I am, &c., .

A LATE OFFICER OF THE "RINGDOVE."

REPICIENT ORPICERS FOR SWALL VESSELS.

To the Editor of the Mand and Military iteratio.

Sin,—From my own and experience I have found. that the covered command a young Officer tries to obtain is, under the present regulations, one Mt Jose, latigue, and disampointment. Sir George Cockburn, in a maly in the House of Commons, states that the Megas briga were lost from being maniformity Officered. Surely such an avowal from the first Naval man in the country would have led the Board, in which he occupies so prominent a pusition, to after this arrangement, and put these vessels in a condition worthy of a British man-of-Let us take the complement bliowed to steemvessels (Lieutenants' commands) for an example : we find that one Lieurenant Commander, two Mates, one Assistant-Surgeon, two Midshipmen, one Second Master, and a Clerk in charge, comprise the whole of the Officers. The above number, if adhered to, might, in some instances, be found sufficient ; but let any Officer, commissioning one of the said vessels, find out what Be will obtain of this complement; a Second Masterwith diffigulty, and who is generally very unfir for the high responsibility attending his charge; Mutes—if he is lucky he may get one, who perhaps has heen selend on by the Admiralty, his term of leave having just expired, wito join, anwillingly, and is, therefore, unfit for the ex-zoutive office be has to perform; Midshipmen---mone; and if they were procurable, surely no Commenter would rest securely with a boy whose age and ex-perience does not warrant his being entrusted with proper school until after he had passed his exemi-nation, would be sent to his hammock by a considerate Officer after an hour or two of his watch had gone by. Therefore, in many cases steam-vessels of 500 and 600 tons, representatives of a British man-of-war, are sout to sea, with a Lieut.-Com., and a 2d Master, fresh from the merchant service, whose only examination to fit him for his altuation is his knowledge of the bearings and marks down channel; and who cannot even mark the course required in the Admiralty charts, by reason of their not being given with unguette hearings. Such is the equipment of our small vessels! Now, Sir, surely with the immense list of Lieuts., the number of Mates revelling in claret, elver appons, and armorral bearings, &c. in our line-of-battle ships, some alteration might be made to render our small vessels more efficient. Instead of the present complement, give a Licut. Com. a Brevet rank above all other Lieuts. during his command; give him some small extra allowance for his table, and instead of two Mates and two midshipmen, give him one Lacut., two Mates, and a gunner; it will he no sacrifice in a pecuntary point of view to the country. The junior Liouts, are packed all over the world in large ships as supernumerarius, doing nothing, paying expensively for their meases, and having no cabins nor comforts, as their rank antitles them to. By this system you would make a young zeal-ous Lieut, do the duty of lat Lieut, and would bring up a grouter number of afficient Officers for the stemu hervice. The appointment of a gonner I advocate not only as a person to look after stores, which in all small vessels are greatly neglected, but as an intermediate between Officers and men, which is much required in steam vessels where the engine separates completely the lower deck from the gun-room; according to the present regulations there is not a responsible Officer on the lower-deck; not even a Serjeant of Marines is allowed -- and it is wellknown that the Police duty of all small vessels is generally performed by that Non-commissioned Officer, who has been an acting Master-at-arms. But now only allowing a Corporal, who ranks with a second clean petty Officer, it is both uncomfortable for the Corporal, as well as unfair to the first class petty Officer, to put him in charge of

Should those few remarks, Sir, be worthy of insertion, I may at a future period offer you, from the experience I have had in small vessels, some more observations, feeling that our large vessels, which are the covy of all nations, are not kept pace with by our smaller ones; and that in Foreign men-of-war the dignity of the quarterdook is kept up equally, in the smallest as in the largest ships; so that the cry in other services is not one of opprobrium, when mention is made of "a small craft Officer."

"A Constant Reader" (Leeds), should address the Officer at the United Service Club, Pall Mull. We thank a "Guernseyman," but are rather sceptical

as to the real author of the defence; at all events, the speech of the Procurour de la Reine is a most marvellous spe-cimen of what they call in Ireland Blatheramekite.

The Guerneey Memorial.—We have already refused to publish communications addressed to us on this affair; several latters have been received, but all tainted with party spirit. The writers should recollect that no man is immacu late; all have failings of one description or the other; and great allowands should be made in a ouse where the party by service in the field, and extraordinary talents as the Military historian of our times, has established a claim to the lasting gratitude of his countrymen. The thing to be eondemned is the defence injudiciously put forth, and we advise all parties to alose the discussion; at all events we shall not interfere further, unless furced by the imprudence of others.

cation arrived too late for this week.

To "One of the Heavies" (Stepney). - It would be difficult to make the matter intelligible to any person, the whole of the off reckonings being connected with the fanelful fractional additions and deductions in which the Exchequer formerly delighted. The rates of off-reckon-ings, both in the Cavairy and Infantry, avoisedly consti-tute a source of profit to the Colonel. However, we may assure our Correspondent, without puzzling him with figures, that no injustice is done to the Corporals, who have no claim whatever for more than they now receive. nor to a better quality of clothing.

The letter of "Candidas" should have been addressed to the Puper which published the unpalatable remarks respecting Lieut. Alpin, and to which it is intended as an onewer: moreover, we think that "Candidus" will act wisely in dropping a subject which, in our opinion, is not likely to improve from agitation.

Naval & Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, MARCH 30, 1844.

WE heartily congratulate the Army that it has been desided by the Authorities, upon a Return called for of all married Officers in Great Britain and Ireland living out of barracks, that each married Officer, so living out of barracks, in Great Britain shall receive 2s. 6d. a week for coals and candles, and in Ireland 2s. 9d. On the part of the Army we thank the Soldier's Friends, Sir George Marray and Sir Henry Hardinge, to whom many a blessing will be given for the boon.

Having by perseverance gained this important measure, we beg further to suggest that it would be a great'advautage, both to the Government and Officers, were the principle extended to all classes of Officers living in barracks. Much trouble would be saved to the Ordnance Department, and the Officers could then supply themselves with goods of a quality very different from the trash now served out.

THE renewal of the claims of the l'eninsular warriors for a decoration commomorative of their victorious career. has roused the neglected veterans of England's Naval triumphs; and their application is now so forcibly savocated that the invidious system of conferring honorary rewards on the higher class of Officers only, and excluding even the most gallant of subordinate ranks, will no longer be a reproach to the Military Service of this country. The Subaltern of Austerlitz and of Marengo, wore his cross as proudly as the chief who led his division in that victorious field; and the veteran who shared the glories of Welliagton and of Nelson, would estimate an insignia made from the cannon captured from the enemy, more highly than many of the glittering stars by which he is surrounded at the court of his Sovereign.

The procumed disinclination of an illustrious and honored chief to support the request of his gallant followers, is painfully contrasted with the generous sentiments of the immortal Nelson, who, on an occasion of similar interest, thus uddressed one of his Captains : "I have been so much hurrled and annoyed that no notice has been taken of our April 2d by Lord St. Vincent, who, in contradiction of what I thought a most positive assurance that we were to have medals, now tells me that he always thought it improper to recommend the measure to the King. You may judge of my feelings-the result you shall know-but I am fired never to abandon the fair fame of my companions in danger. I may offend and suffer, but I had rather suffer from that then my own feelings ."

Those expressions are truly characteristic of the hero who, when leading the boarders on the 14th February, 1797, exclaimed, " Victory or Westminster Abbey."

The example of such a man should be perpetuated, and in no way can it be so effectually impressed, as by adopting for the contemplated order of merit the appropriate motto of

" Palmam qui mercit ferat."

Sir Andrew Leith Hay's motion will be seconded by another good Soldier, Colonel Fox.

We annex two of several letters before us on the subject of conferring an Order of Merit on the Old War Officers, becquent campaigns have their marks on the hearts of the conquerors, and if they have not, why let them at once be granted. As to our glorious tars, I wish them every success, for they righly deserve all possible reward which their advocates can suggest.

Agitate! agitate! and the deepest gratitude, is (Sir), due to you, as it always has been, for your active zeal in behalf of the United Services. FIRE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gasette. Sin,-As a constant reader of your valuable and useful paper, it is with much pleasure I observe that Col. Sir A. Leith Hay intends shortly to bring forward and advocate in the Commons House of l'arliament the case of the long-neglected claums of the Officers who fought under the gallant Duke of Wellington during the Peninsular War-claims, though long unrequited, never too late to meet the wishes of the few remaining brave men who laid the foundation of our present Military achieve-ments in India, &c. &c. When we consider the boon, either of honours or pecuniary rewards, recently granted to both Services, and find the old war-worn veterans of the Peninsular neglected, with our present Chief at the head of the Military department, who so well knows the merit of their claims, it appears strange that nothing has been done. Their advocacy, so praiseworthy to the gal-lant Officer whose intention it is to undertake the cause of their well-merited service (I may say the almost forgotten war veterans), entitles him to the highest eulogium for an undertaking which ought to have met its reward long ago, ere many, who are now no more, might have participated, and have been proud to say " I was one," and to have handed down to posterity the well-earned meed, infusing at the same time a martial ardour, and a proud as well as a pleasing memento for future glory.

The apathy and neglect to the Peninsular Officers appears more pulpable and glaring by the recent honours almost daily bestowed on those who, no doubt, most gallantly won them, and, of course, justly deserve them.

Then, why make the war veterans of the Peninsular a solitary or isolated case?

The country and the world at large know what they have done. No mean sense of expenditure would arge the nation to withhold the very trilling cost of a decorative, or any other honour, due on the occasion; with no thanks to the aupineness of those who have neglected their duty in this instance.

Aproper representation to our most gracious Queen, together with the able advocacy of Col. Sir A. L. Hay, will, I have no doubt, prove effective, and ment the thanks of the country, as well as the undecorated few.

Newsastle-on-Tyne, March 25. PHILO JUSTICIA.

Wz would respectfully yet most earnestly urge the Authorities to a speedy distribution of the promised Medala for the campaign in Scinde. Cholern, and the chances of Indian service, have already laid low many of those who entered Hyderabad with Sir Charles Napier's Army, and who would have been proud to wear the distinction on their breasts. It would be an act of kindness on the part of those who have the management of affair , to remember that the same causes are constantly at work, and that the remnant of the little Army of Scinde mus be duily diminishing. "Bis dat qui cito dat."

We hope that the authorities will take care to have the names of the parties entitled to the medals engravon thereon, and not, as in the case of the Ghuzneo and Jellalabad medals, allow them to be lamed indiscriminately in India, and also sent to relatives in this country, without any such specification, thereby creating great confusion and mischief. Many of the latter medals will, unless immediate steps are taken to recall them, or have the names of the parties entitled to wear them engraven thereps, fall into improper hands, and be productive of introduced by "M. C." in our last Gazette, and upon which we have commented year after year, and announces that a Captain is to be added to the strength of every Regiment of the East India Company's Army. This would be a very slight and scarcely a perceptible increase of European Officers. We cannot approve of such a beggarly augmentation. Every company ought to have a Captain, a Licutenant, and Ensign, and until the Company's regiments obtain that fair augmentation, the complaints so justly made, and so nobly supported by Sir Charles Napier, will not have been redressed. We too well know the lavish hand with which the civil service of the Company is paid, and 'tis this drain on the finances of India which has prevented the Native Army from being adequately supplied with European Officers. We may blink the question at we please, but the truth is this-we hold India by the sword. The sword is a sword in the hands of justice, but it is still a sword. 'Tis the conviction of its being wielded with justice and mercy that constitutes the much vaunted "Government of Opinion." Truly, if the home authorities eke out an augmentation of the European Officers in this paltry manner, they will incur a considerable expense, and yet do very little indeed to supply the deficiency of British leaders for their gallant Sipances. A niggard expenditure is expense without real utility. Give the Native regiments only 8 companies each, but give them also 8 Captains, 8 Lieutenants, and 8 Ensigns, and then the corps will be in fighting condition always.

A " Retired Officer " writes :-

"The rumoured promotion will find its way to India in every letter, and your Gazette will be loudly and anxiously called for at every station throughout the three Presidencies. The Times is a great authority—literally great; and with its three sheets bulky too, and it not comestable to everybody in India: Military Officers have not time to read it; but the Naval and Military Gazette is taken in by every meas, and is spelt through and through by every Officer in the Service."

We accordingly republish the "Times" paragraph, without vouching for its accuracy: in fact, we believe the proposition has been rejected at the India House: we, nevertheless, still hope to stimulate the Authorities to an augmentation that will meet the exigency of the case.

"A proposal has been submitted to—and we believe that we may add approved by—the Court of Directors, for increasing the strength of the Officers in the Indian Army, by the addition of one Captain to each regiment in that Service. The suggestion we consider to have been no less well timed than its adoption is confessedly necessary. The events of our recent campaigns in the East have only served to confirm the observations of former experience as to the inadequate numbers of the Officers to whom the discipline and the safety of the Anglo-Indian Army is confided. Brave as that Army is—resolute as it is, and ever has been, under circumstances of the most trying danger, whilst fix European Officers lived to command and encurage the strettons of their men—Military experience has shown that the disproportion between the number of the Officers in the Company's and the Queen's Services is often the cause of great loss, swen though not of defeat or disgrace. The Asiatic mind requires the animaling presence of European daring, as well as the bracking influence of European discipline, are it can face the hazard of an anequal contest, or endure the hazas of a dissurtous retreat. Whilst the Officers remain, the Sepoys will ding to their colours; when they are cut off, disorder and confusion run riot among the troous.

"It is, therefore, with unfeigned satisfaction that we see a first step taken towards averting the calamities to which our Native Army in the East must, in time of wer, always be exposed by the paucity of its Officers; as we are convinced by the universal tastimony of Milkary men on this sebject, that an addition to the numerical strength of its English leaders will increase the efficiency and animate the energies of that vast Army, which defends the remote provinces of Great Britain between the Indus and the Barhamponder."—Times.

We believe that arrangements have been made with the Government in India for the immediate return to this country of Her Majesty's 13th Light Infantry. This regiment has been abroad since the 3d of January, 1923. It landed in India the same year, and saw very severe service in the Birman War. It has, during the last five years, gone from glery to glory in every campaign, and is, we sincerely hope, now about to becove in England that welcome which gallant doeds so richly deserve. It may seem strange that this regiment should have been sent down from the Upper Provinces to Scinde, rather than to Bengal; but we have reason to believe that this route was considered not only the best but shortest, and that there never was the alightest intention of detaining the regiment

THE Times of Monday closely follows up a subject in Science. The next mail will probably inform us of troduced by "M. C." in our last Gasette, and upon transports having been taken up for the conveyance of the bich we have commented year after year, and announces corps to England, direct from Kurraches.

Our private letters from Bombay state that the health of the troops in Soinds had so much improved, that the 13th would embark is April or May.

The sunered letter of "Pro bono Publice" merits the attention of Sir Henry Hardings. We have always viewed it as a harsh measure to deprive an Officer's Widow of her Pension on remarrying, except when by her marriage she atteins to a state of afficence which may fairly cause the Scoretary-at-War to withdraw it.

While we say this, we feel satisfied that we would be justified in taking higher ground, and in easerting that in no case, except of moral depravity, nught the Pension to be taken from an Officer's Widow. The pension was formerly continued to the Widow for her life, and most assuredly when struck off it was never contemplated that it would lead to such results as we fear are too truly stated in the following letter.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Cassette.

Sin,—I beg leave (as a lover of morality) to suggest to Government, through your widely-circulated Paper, the peculiar grievance of many Widows of Army and Navy Officers, that are furbidden to marry under penalty of losing their pensions, and in consequence of which some are unfortunately living most dishonourably and sinfully, that might have otherwise been respectable members in day for almost every class of Officers, and for the community in general, surely the least that could be granted (many of them being Widows of men that died in their country's cause) is to allow them the same privilege as those married previous to 1830.

In the hope, Sir, these few remarks may induce you to give it publicity in your highly respectable Gazette, and that a kind and virtuous Government will take their case into consideration, I am, &c. Pao seno Publico.

Murch 12th, 1844.

THE intention, if it exists, of doing away with the white linen trousers of our Army serving in the United Kingdom, cannot be too highly commended. In this elimate there are not 20 days in the year on which the soldier would not be truly glad to wear cloth. We would suggest that the opinions of the Medical Officers of the Army be taken on this point; and we think we may undertake to sesert that nine in ten would give their opinion against the use of the linen trousers. The scidier has, and can only sarry, two per. The weather frequently does not admit of the trousers being dried outside, and to dry them in the barrackrooms is very properly prohibited, as injurious to health. The result of this is, that the soldier seldom puts the trouvers on dry. Hence comes a host of diseases. We most urgently beg attention to this subject. It is hardly our province to point out the proper substitute, but we conceive that a pair of cloth trousers, of a thinner but strong quality, might advantageously be supplied, and to be taken into wear on the lat May and till lat October; or continue to wear the cloth trousers, as at present, throughout the whole year.

In our last we offered some remarks in reference to improvements in Naval Architecture, upon which a correspondent has moved an amendment. His suggestions are certainly worthy attention; for if we could have "Irish" (instead of "Monster") correttes, i. e. corvettes with a quarter-deck and forecastle, it would indeed be a vast improvement. The advantages of a dry deck and comfortable shelter for the ship's company are so great, that they should not be thrown away, if they can be preserved tegether with the requisite sailing qualifications. With these prefatory observations we leave our correspondent to speak for himself.

Wire, we observe the undessing activity which is displayed by the French Government in the construction of a steam Navy, the armament of our steam-frigates becomes a subject of the deepest interest. At present, the batteries of our steam-frigates do not appear to be at all proportionate to their size and east. For instance, the Terrible, which is building at Deptford, will measure about 1800 tens; her length will be 226 feet; and she will cost, first and last, the expense of her engines included, shout £90,000; nor does it seem that she could well be constructed for less money. She will be a splendid ship, her engines will be of 800 herse-power, and yet she will only carry six guns. We have rated the total expense of building and fitting her out at £90,000, because her engines are contracted for at a cost of £40,200; and her other expenses, from the style of her construction, which is first-rate, cannot be estimated at less than £50,000. The reason of her armament being so disproportionate to her size and cost is obvious. The weight of her engines is 500 tons, and she is to carry 800 tons of costs; and thus about 540 tons only will be left for gans, stores, ammunition, water, &c.

The remedy for this evil is not easily to be discovered. When steam-frigates are employed as single ships, or in distant voyages, the case appears to be remediless. But when steam-frigates are designed to be somponent parts of a Mediterranean or Channel fleet, it should seem that they ought to be of a different construction, and to have greater capacities for sailing, so as to be able to accompany the squadron without using their angines; and whilst their steam-engines should be of equal power, they should carry only 200 tons of coals, and thirty or thirty-sin guns of very heavy calibre. In the event of a great Naval engagement, their steam would thus be just as serviceable as if they had 800 tons of costs on board, for few Naval sugagements last more than one or two days; and they would, thus armed, be very formidable akips in a general action, where the great object is to orippie each of the enemy's ships in the shortest possible time. If coal-reservoirs be deemed advisable, a few of our 42-gun frigates might be used for this purpose, and carry each of them 500 tons of woals, and accompany the flest. The subject is well worthy of the serious consideration of the Board of Admiralty. At present our largest steam-frigates do not carry a larger armament than that which the razoed Dadalus is designed to carry, viz., two very heavy pivot 42-pounders, and fourteen heavy guns, probably 68-pounders of 66 owt.

Even prone to rejojce when real merit obtains its reward, we cannot, on the other hand, avoid giving expression to our disapprobation of the sunexed paragraph, which appeared a few days since in the "Morning Herald" and "Standard," in reference to Bir Joseph Douglas—a Master in the Navy—who, if their information be true, is to be made a Commander, and appointed Master-Attendant of Deptford Dockyard, as a reward for services alleged to have been performed by him in China.

If an Officer, in the pursuit of gain, in the Mercantile Navy, is to reap rewards which have hitherto been deemed the meed of Naval services, adicu to all zeal and energy in the legitimate Service. Naval Officers must press forward, not to obtain employment in Her Majesty's ships and vessels of war, but to command Merchant slips.

If Sir Joseph Douglas rendered those important ser vices blurted out in our faces on all occasions, and lost so much money by his speculations, it is to the coffers of the Treasury, and not to Admiralty promotion, he has a right to look. His Naval services are briefly these :- In May, 1823, he man confirmed a Master, and was one of the lucky "golden gannets." Having made some two or three thousand pounds, Mr. Douglas was appointed, in October, 1824, to the Hondison, in which frients he went to the East Indies. On the 16th Pebruary, 1826, he was superseded in the East Indies by Mr. Langdon, since which period the Navy has never benefited by his abilities. In August, 1835, having refused to serve when appointed to a ship, Mr. Douglas was scratched off the list of Masters, and was only restored to his rank within the last faw months." If unprecedented promotion and a good situation agait on such claims, what will become of those silly fellows who seek "the bubble reputation even in the cannon's mouth?"

"We understand that Sir J. Douglas, whose name has been too frequently before the public to need introduction, as the Captain of a merchantman, knighted by Her! Majesty, at the recommendation of the late Government, for nobly devoting his life, his ship, and his whole for-tune, at the commencement of the war with China, in rescuing the name of his country from the temporary disgrace into which it had been suffered to lapse, is about to have the rank of Commander of the Royal Navy conferred upon him, and to be appointed to the amount of Master-Attendant at Deption Dockyard."—Standard.

Wire reference to our Gunette of the 16th inst., in which we suggested the propriety of forming two Battalions of Royal Marines for service in the Mediterraneau, they now state that the Board of Admiralty we believe we have taken the subject into their carnest consideration. and are about acting upon it forthwith.

It is mended that the present Battalion in Ireland, which is now divided into different detachments, should be collected together, and permanently stationed at Spike Island - subject of course to be moved, in case of emergency, to any other part of that country. The object in making Spike Island head-quarters is obvious: in the event of a Squadron being at once required for Foreign Service, the most convenient reudezvous proviously to sailing would be the Cove of Cork and having arrived there, they have nothing to do but to take on board 800 disciplined Marine soldiers, all ready formed into a regular battalion, with the Field and Staff Officers. 'Again, whilst they are in Ireland, we can reduce the Military Establishment of that country by one regiment.

hattalions of 800 men each are to be formed for service in the Mediterranean, one to be stationed at Gib-raltar, and the other at Mults. This arrangement, which we have so constantly recommended, will prove of inosiculable benefit to the Service at large; it will enable us to reduce our Military Establishment on that station by two regiments of the line; and poor as the boon is to this over-worked branch of the Service, when the whole of these arrangements are carried into effect, the Horse Guards will have three regiments-of-the-line at their disposal, to enable them to relieve some of those corps which have been stationed in the East Iudies for the last twenty years, and upwards.

Having stated so much, let us now take the liberty of impressing upon the Admiralty the necessity and importance of forming these battallons with a due regard to a proper number of Field Officers and an officient Staff. can make no complaint as to the efficiency of the Irish Battalion; but we "may observe that no battalion of eight hundred men should be sent on Foreign service, unless under the command of a full Colonel, as "Second Commandant," and two Lieurenant-Colonels, with a liberal proportion of Captains and Subalterns, and an officient Staff. For this service, an increase of six Highl Officers to the corps will be necessary, with a proportionate increase to the number of Captains and Subalterns. Now, when we take into consideration the few Field Officers in the Marine corps, compared with its sister service, the Royal Artillery, and recollect that there are at this moment three Lieutenant-Coloneli detached from their respective divisions on command duty, we do hope to see at least an increase of nine Field Officers to the corps.

Bearing in mind that the present Board of Admiralty have as yet, although with every good inclination towards them, sourcely done anything for their gallant friends, the Marines, we feel, now that they have commenced the good work, that they will not alone give this increase of nine Field Officers to the corps, but also add considerably to the Retired List. That there is to be an increase of Field Officers, and an axtensive retirement of Field Officers and Captains, is certain; but as we have from time to time observed, that whenever a promotion takes place in the Marines, there is a corresponding stop for some years amongst all ranks to advancement; what we wish to se e done now h a liberal retirement as to numbers given to the corps, and also a regulation made that a certain number from each rank MUST retire upon the full-pay every year-say, independent of the permanent ratirements already esta-blished, four Field Officers and eight Captains. By this means, and this means alone, the corps will be henceforward well and efficiently Officered.

We repeat again and again, that unless the Admiralty are prepared to give some extensive promotion to this efficient aim of the Service, it is worse than idle doing anything else in the shape of allowing a few decrepted old men to retire; for such will effect no general good, but, on the contrary, do a great deal of harm, by engendering invidious distinctions, and creating considerable discontent amongst those who are equally deserving of the boon, but not so forgunate as the invoured few selected.

Tun fable of the partitiont mountain has again been examplified, by the result of a General Court-Martial, held at Jamaica on the 13th of February, and continued, by adjournments, to the 17th, for the trial of Lieut. John Gaggin Cox, of the 2d West India Regiment, on two charges preferred against him ostensibly by the Major-General Commanding there.

At page 771 of our Gasette of the 9th of Decembe last, we gave a copy of two charges which were preferred against Lient. Cox before a General Court-Martial, assembled at Up. Park Camp on the 26th of October, of which Lieut,-Colonel Cockburn, of the 2d Batration of the 60th Rifles, was President. The second of those charges was of such a nature, that the Court gave it as their opinion, they had no jurisdiction to try Lieut, Con on it, and in consequence of that opinion the Major-tleneral, by an Order dated 26th of October, dissolved the Court, and referred the charges to the Horse Guards

From a General Order, dated Kingston, 2d February. 1844, of which we give a copy in this day's Gasette, it appears that the Authorities at home were of opinion that the Court was not justified in withdrawing itself tom the 2d count of the charge, as it "did not either in terms or substance allege a capital charge."

With all due deference toche learned civilian at the head of the Judge-Advocate's Department, we ber leave to differ The net charged against Lieut. Cox was, for having been the cause of the death of a soldier of the him to proceed to Port Royal in a cance, which, from its diminutive size and unsound state, was unsufe for such a purpose, and in consequence of which oulpable order the same Tam O'Shanter was drowned." Now, we submit the wording of the count charges Lieut. Cox with manulaughter at least; for the lat count charges him with disobedience of orders, in sending the man to Port Royal; the 2d, with making him go against bla inclination, by the word persisting. And that part of the count which states his having been sent in an umafe boat or cance, we insist makes the charge capital; but the drawning having been charged through Lieut. Cox's aulpable order, clearly made it so.

We will go a step turther. Any person who directly or indirectly is the cause of the death of another, is in law gutlty of felony; and what is the meaning of the word telony, but a capital charge? And, as we learn the Acting Deputy-Judge-Advocate stated the 2d count came the 70th Article of War, we consider the first sentonce thereof justified the Court in their view of the charge and decision thereon, and that they acted with sound discretion.

"And in general, where an involuntary hilling happens, in con-sequence of an unlawfulect, it will be either murder or manalaughter, seconding to the nature of the act which occasioned it." Again, p. 388—"Also, it a suan do such an act, of which the probable conp. ass.—"Asso, it a man uo such as act, of which the probable consequence may be, and eventually in act, and hilling may be murder, although no atrake be struck by himself, and no killing may be primarily intended; as was the case of the unnatural son, who appeared his sick father to the air against his will, by reason whereoff ided; of the harlot, who laid her child under leaves in an orchard, where a kite struck it and hilled it."

From these extracts the law is elear on the subject; and the second count of the charge against hieut. Cox was in TERMS AND SUBSTANCE & Capital charge, instmuch as the death of Tam O'Shanter came through Liout. Cox having sent him to Port Royal, as stated in the charge itself, by sending him in an unsafe bont,

We are quite at a loss to understand under what claus of the Mutine Act. or Acticles of War, the Court which tried Lieut. Cox found him Guilty of the matter charged against him, in the second count; if we are rightly informed, he was very near being acquitted of it.

As the charges were preferred by the Maj. Gen. Commanding, we think it would have appeared much better if none of his Starr End been on the Court ; and as a great prejudice seems to exist against Lieut. Con in his regiment. other Officers might have been selected in place of the two Captains of his corps.

The Court-Martial which tried Lieut: Con was assembled on the 27th of December, for the trial of Lieut. Willis, of the Royal Artillery, and only one Officer of his corp. was on it (and he had very lately joined from England), that he might have an unprejudiced Court; surely, a little of the same favour might and ought to have been shown Lieut, Cox.

Pinully, we are at a loss to understand the com cent of the General Order of the 20th of February, How could the Court-Martial which meembled at Up-park on the 26th of October, and which was mason was by a General Order the same day, have continued by adjournments, and eventually have tried Liest. Cox, as it states? Surely, there must be some confusion of ideas in all this.

The Queen of the Belgians embarked at Ostend on Tuesday morning, and arrived at Woolwich in the after-nuon, on a visit to Her Mejesty.

On Thursday, Prince Albert left town for Germany. His Royal Highness arrived at Dover in the state carthe South-Eastern Railway, by special train, ringe of attended by Sir Edward Bowater and the Hon. G. E. Anson. On the Royal carriage arriving on the platform at the Dover terminos, the Prince was received by Col. Jones, Commandant of the garrison, and a guard of honour of the 77th Regiment, and under a salute from the guns of the Western Heights. His Royal Highness proceeded to view the station, after which, attended by Colonel Jones, he ascended by the private staticase to Archeliff Fort, and spent half-an-hour in inspecting the fort and surveying the surrounding scenery. His Royal Highness then proceeded towards the harbour on foot, attended by Colonel Jones, &c., and walked along the quay to the steamer the Princers Alice, which lay at the Crosswall ready to receive him. On the Prince going on board the steamer, his own flag, the Gotha aims, quaitered with those of England, was hoisted at the main. At a quarter-past 3 o'clock the Princess Alice got under weigh, and steamed out of the harbour.

We understand it is quite uncertain whether the King of the Beigians will come to this country before Prince Albert roturns from Goths, as we hear, before the illustrious consort of King Leopold lett Ostend, His Majesty contemplated accompanying Prince Albert to Coburg and Gotha, to visit the reigning Grand Duke. There is no doubt, therefore, that the King, who was to meet Prince Albert at Ostend, would accompany the Prince the remainder of the journey, and will come to this country with His Royal Highness, after the visit to Goths, and pass several days with the Queen, and in illy leave with the Queen of the Belgians about the 20th of the ensuing month for Brussels.

Gazette Appointments.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint George Benvenuto Mathew, Esq., to be Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over the Bahama Islands. Also John Mucaulay Higginson, Esq., to be Civil Secretary to the Captain-General and Governorin-Chief of Canada.

The Earl of Cardigan lost during the past week two very valuable horses; a favourite hunter, prized highly by noble owner, was killed on Friday when in full cry after one of the crack packs of hounds in this county. He was ridden by Mr. I'eel, of the 11th Hussers, son of the Premier. On Saturday a trustworthy groom was sent by his Lordahip on another hunter, for the purpose of exercise, to have the carcass of his pet hunter brought home to the kennel for the dogs; and, strange to say, that this second horse was run against by a horse and cart, his chest burst in, and killed on the spot. His Lordship, it is eaid, heard of those losses with his usual equanimity and indifference, speaking of them as ordinary alties,-Dublin Paper.

Sir Themas Picton's Monument,-At Carmarthen a subscription has been commenced for the purpose of repairing the gallant Sir Thomas Picton's monument, which has been so long a reflection upon the county.

The Yesmen of the Guard .- Amid the many reductions and alterations in the Royal household, we hear that it is in contemplation to reduce the number of the Yeomen of the Guard. This ancient and picturesque corps was formed originally by Henry VIII., maintained by successive soveregue, and kept in requisition, day and night, at St. James's Pelace and Windsor during the reign of George III. On the accession of George IV., and since that period, their duties have been curtailed, although "the roll" is called every day at tweive o'clock at St. There yet. In cases every my at tweever the confined panels Palace. Their official duties are now confined to State processions, State balls, levees, councils, and drawling-rooms; their services being dispensed with since the Queen has attended divine service at the new chapal in Buckingham Palace. The necessary qualification for a yeoman, was formerly, the stature of six feet, and the payment of 300/. But William IV. altered these rules, und graciously conferred the appointment of a recman of the body-guard on deserving Wurrant Officers of the Navy and Non-commissioned Officers of the Army. Among the earliest admissions was Serjeant Secker, of the Royal Marines, into whose arms the immortal Nelson fell m tally wounded at Trafalgar; and the corps now numbers many of those gallant men of the United Service who have deserved well of their country.

The Merchant Service.—A Deputation on the subject of the establishment of Boards for the examination of Masters and Mates in the Merchant Service, had an inter-Masters and Mates in the Merchant Service, had an interview with the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone on Monday, at the office of the Board of Trads. The Deputation was headed by Captain Gladstone, M.P., and consisted of Mr. G. Duncan, M.P. for Dundee; Sir J. Duke, M.P. for Boston; the Lord Provost of Edinburgh, Adam Black; the Lord Provost of Glasgow, J. Lumsden; Mr. R. Henderson, of Glasgow; Mr. G. Levie; Capt. Cook, for London; Mr. Robert MrKie, for Lundon; and Mr. A. Macdowall, for Glasgow. After a desultory converta-tion, in which Sir H. Douglas and other Honourable Members took part, the President of the Board of Trade stated that the measure had been for some time under the consideration of the Government—that they were inclined to deal with the subject-and hoped that they might be able to introduce a Bill in the course of the pre-Merchanis' Seamen Society.—On Wednesday a mosting of the Governors of this charity, which is established for the relief and support of sick, maimed, and disabled seamen, their widows and orphans, was held at the So-ciety's rooms, Birchin-lane. From the Report read by Mr. on, it appeared that the receipts amounted to 21,731/. 3c. 9d.; and the disbursements, including 17,638/, paid to pensioners, figured 20,330/. 17s. 2d. The following the pensioners on the Society's funds, viz., 1646 men Accident to Sir Robert Gill.—Saturday week Sir Rohert Gill met with a severo accident while hunting with Mr. Candler's hounds at the Trench Woods, near Crowle. Mr. Candler's hounds at the Trench women were stated Sir Robert, during a check, was in the act of lighting a check, was in the act of lighting a check, was in the act of lighting and cigar, when his horse; a very spirited unimal, shied, a rearing himself perpendicularly, fell backwards with his rider underneath him. Bir Robert was very severely bruised, but is going on well.—Worcester Chronicle, Lieut, Victor, R.N., who was drowned at Belfast, was the aon of an old and distinguished Officer of Ma-rines. He entered the Naval Service at an early age, in 1806, on board the Hannibal. In 1807 was promoted to Lieutenant; in 1811 he received high testimonials from Gen. Sir H. Fane, in consequence of his servicus in the gun-boats, while acting under that Officer. Lieut. Victor was appointed an Officer of the Customs, in which he continued up to his lamented death.

Sudden Death. Yesterday morning about ten o'clock Captain Doran, R.N., one of the Directors of the General Steam Navigation Company, expired at his residence in Piccadilly. On the previous afternoon Capt. Doran, who was in his usual good health, proceeded to Lombard-at., for the purpose of transacting his usual business, and whilst there complained of being unwell, returned home, and expired as above stated.

Amputation Performed during Memeric Sleep. Welserhampton Chronicle contains the following extraordinary statement, for the accuracy of which it vonches:—John Marrion, aged 45, residing in Canlane, Sedgley, received an extensive miury of the middle finger in January last, and became a patient of Mesers. Thompson and Dunn. It has since been treated by those a non-peen and Dunn. At massines over treated by cover gentlemen in the usual manuar, but the nature of the injury rendered amputation necessary. With a view to test measured sleep, Marrion consented to the proposal to place himself under the treatment of Dr. Owendy and on Sunday week, for the first time, he was measurerised. The patient week, for the first time, he was measurerised. The patient was afterwards daily measurerised, and the case created intense intense in the public mind, more particularly among medical men, who attend in numbers every day to mark Dr. Owens' progress. On Saturday the operation was performed, and Mr. Dunn's room was througed with medical and other gentlemen, to witness the event. The patient, on being brought into the room, appeared wither flushed, but Dr. Owens addressed him in a lively and friendly manner, and he took his sent evidently quite somposed. In two minutes and a half deep along was produced, but the dooler kept his position some time

Dr. Manniz then felt the petient's pulse, which best one hundred per minute. Some questions were put to him while in this state by Dr. Owens, and language to him while in this crate by Dr. Ciwons, and language being excited, he said he felt very comfortable. "Pro-ceed with the operation," said the doctor; and in one minute Mr. Duna had performed it very neatly. The cutting the flaps and the dividing of the bone by the nup-pers was watched with breathless scrutiny by all present, but not a muscle quivered nor did a sigh escape, nor dul any single thing occur to betray the elightest sensation. During the dressing of the erra the hand was suspended over the table in a cataleptic state, without any further support. Two minutes after the operation Dr. Mannix falt the man's pulse—it was still 100. Dr. Owens then excited laughter, and the patient laughed happily, evidently quite unconscious of the relief he had undergone. Some time clapsed, during which he continued sleeping, and on being questioned in that state he was not at all aware of what had been done. Being awake (which was done instantaneously by Dr. Owens knuching the organ of firmness, which seemed to act almost mireculously), and finding his arm in a sling, he sjaculated—"Thank the Lord for that." In raply to questions, he said he had not felt it. Every gentleman present signed the minutes, which were noted by Mr. Gatis, during the operation, when a liberal subscription was raised for the man, and Dr. Owens was warmly oungratulated.

Elections.—Christohurch and Hestings have this week returned Conservatives; at the former the Mon. E. A Harris obtained a majority of 96; and at Hastings Mr. Brisco had a majority of 342 over Mr. Moore, out of 680 votes. The latter contest may be considered a signal defeat of the League; as at the former election the Conservative majority was but 19!

Admiral Dupetil Thouars.—Public subscriptions, every one knows, are being raised in France for a sword to be given to the French Admiral, who exhibited his Gallic valodr by a victory over Queen Pomare-a feat which Mr. T. P. Cooke, the only recognized British seaman, would very properly describe as an set "unworthy the name of a Tar, who would rather see all his timbers irrevocably shivered than run down a craft with a helpless recently anterest than both the ought to be piping all bands for the protection of lonely, defenceless, and, of course, virtuous woman." Punch, ever anxious to combat against humbug of every description, and to rush into the thickest of the fight, has called upon one of his artists to draw the sword, which has been accordingly drawn ; and it is hoped that our cut of this sword is more to the purpose than any cut the sword will ever give in the hands of its intended owner. The hilt represents Queen Pomare, whom the French Admiral audeavoured to make a bandle of. On the blade is another representation of her Tahitian Majesty, keeting before Thouars, who with a littleness that quite justifies his presumen of Petit, it waving insultingly over her that most obtrusive bit of rag, which was formerly respected as the tricolour, but which is sadly soiled and degraded by some of the hands it has since fallen into. The scabbard is covered with various emblematical designs, headed by a little monstrosity intended to signify Young France, who, if not both "old enough and agly enough" to take care of itself, certainly possesses the latter of these two requisites for self-protection. other devices are emblematical of the object for which the sword is given; but the Admiral himself is typified by the inside, which, as the sword is out of the scabbard, conveys the idea of absolute emptiness.— Punch,

Temple of Juggernaul.—A dispatch has been sent out from the Court of Directors of the East India Company to the Governor-General of India, relative to the Temple of Jaggernaut, and the superintendence of the native religious institutions. They transmit with it copies of a publication respecting the present state of the temple, in which are statements to the effect, that patronage and support, notwithstanding the abelitaon of the pilgrim-tax, whole we never remember to have seen the rooms at crowded on any similar occasion. Amongst the more dis-tioquished exhibitors may be mentioned Hurlstone, J. P. Davis, Tennant, Holland, Dickson, Clint, Prentia, Leigh, Redgrave, Muntague, Stavens, Woolmer, &c. From the crowded state of the rooms, however, and from the insbility to obtain a catalogue until towards the close of the day, we are unable to particulariae. Without any production of a very commanding obsersater, there are good pictures this year, and fower bad ones, than we have been accustomed to observe on the walls of this institution. Sculpture is evidently in a state of "progression."

Panorama.—On Monday we had a private view of another new panoramic picture in Lajaceter Square—that of the Island and Bay of Hong-Kong, pointed by Mr. Burford, from drawings taken by Lieut. F. J. White, of the Royal Marines, in 1843. The subject, we hardly need say, is one of an eminently attractive nature; and it the Royal Marines, in 1843. The subject, we hardly need say, is one of an eminently attractive nature; and it appears to have had every possible justice rendered to it'in the execution. In the words of the printed description—"The Panorama is taken from a commending attaction in the herbour, and sentences a very considerable extent of view. On the contin is the labed, presenting the whole of the night town of Victoria, already rising into consequence. Streets of commodiate houses, in every style of architecture, separal churches and chapts of inferent denomination, where, a stores, and mounterplie cottages and hults of the Chinese, structs along the shure, it on irregular manner, a situance of super, taken two milies; whilst various little eminences, rising at intervals, are crowned by buildings of eministants size, among which the British enalga, as are several charitable institutions, from their size and situation; the whole is bacted by a range of high, rugged, and barron hills, of every veriety of character, and every diversity of colour, forming an impusing heat-ground, and contrasting finely with the pleaning appearance of the town. To the murth, the mainland of China presents a few buildings about the small town of Kuw-loom, and a succession of infly hills and mountains, or far as the eye can reach; some tring suddenly from the water's edge, and towering is an immuse height, the gagged and stern character of which gives granders to the sceed, which or overly doscription; large heavy-built, and wretchedly appointed war-junks, offering a strange cautivas to the beautiful symmetry and overved per special or a strange cautivas to the beautiful symmetry and overved per proved and palotad Mandarin-host, fishing and fast house, close to the speciator, as to afford an interesting insight into the manners, cautomia, and cowness of this singular people."

There is not a word in this description beyond the plain and simple truth. The respective objects in the paintifully transparent—the datames are finely preserved as force and breadth in the execution. The air-tipt is beautifully transparent—the distances are finely preserved mand the sky is exquisite reality. We regard this ploture as one of Mr. Burford's greatest triumphs. The figures, we should add, are by Mr. M. C. Selous: they are admirably nainted.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, MARGE 25.—Entirinents from Workhouses.—The Marquess of Normany, in presenting a putition from the relatives of a boy, 124 years old, who had been, it appeared; entisted from a workhouse for unlimited service as a Drummer, and was now on his voyage to India, and great completing that arises as to the practice of entisting boys from union workhouses. In this particular case he imputed no blame to the Military Authorities, they having had an erroneous certificate of the boy's age.—The Dake of Weathearch desired that he might be supplied with a copy of the petition, for the purpose of investigation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, Manus 16.—The Conquest of Gendler. — Mr. Macaullay gave notice, that he would soon after the Easter holidays submit to the consideration of the House certain resolutions to toolsing the late interment might, if they thought it desirable, lay on the table of the House before that time any document lighty to elucate the subject. Apy hon Member might move to that effect, but it was not his intention to do so, as he publication respecting the present state of the templa, in which are statements to the wifect, that parousage and support, notwithstanding the abolition of the pilgrim-tax, are still afforded to Juggarnent, in the annual payment of 60,000 rupees for the maintenance of the templa, the feet of the pilgrim bunters, the embellishments of the idol, and the pemp of the festivale. They further request to be informed as to whether the trade of the Purkares, or pilgrim-hunters, is continued, and the authority of the police employed to impress the isbouring clauses to drag the idol's ear at the great festivals. Also, whether the trade of the Purkares is sanctioned by the Government; whether the superstition at Juggernaut "is now flourishing beyond all experience;" and whether the loss of life among the pilgrims is as high as 50,000 yearly? The dispatch intimates that it is the express desire of the Caurt that the quthority of the police may be employed on all consistent in the people from dragging the idol's ear.

India Rubber Pawment is being laid down in the Admiralty court-yard. Query. For "Leap Froy," and the young Officers to jump over the old ones' heads?

The Twenty-first Exhibition of the Society of British Artists, in Suffolk Street, was present; and upon the doing. The Court, therefore, recommended him to mercy, and but for that recommendation he would have suffered death. He was sent home and transported for 14 years. But the effect was lost upon the fact; there was no example before them; mobady knew what became of the man. The Article ought to be altered. Let it be death, or such other punishment as the Court. Martial should think fit, to be inflicted upon the spot. The Court. Martial should not be put in a position to prevent them carrying the law into effect. (Hear.)—Mr. S. Hannar would not at that moment give an opinion upon the expediency of the alterations suggested by the hon, and galant Gentleman; but he would consult with the Admiratry, and give an answer upon the bringing up of the report.—Mr. M. O'FMRALL said this question had arisen in the case of the Marines on service on the coast of Spain, and urged that some alteration should be made.—Caut. Pacsus, was aware that this was both a difficult and a delicate subject. But when they heard that every person, including every Midshipman and every Volunteer, who should sleep on his watch, was listile to the founishment of death, or such punishment as the Coart Martial should think fit, they must admirt that an alteration of the law was required. Sleeping on a watch was not so bad an offence as a sentinel sleeping at his post; and men wayo constantly in the habit of sleeping on their watch, with this threat of death hanging over their heads. The bill went through committee. The Court, therefore, recommended him to mercy, and not so bad an offence as a sentine alrephing at his past, and seem wago constantly in the bablt of siesping on their watch, with this threat of death hanging over their heads. The bill went through committee.

THENDAY, Mager 26.— Dr. Horrison's Family. — Bir G. Braustan moved for a committee of the whole House, to consider of an address to the Crown in favour of the widow and family of the late Dr. Morrison, on the ground of his eminent public services in China, sulogised in a wronkamation of Sir Henry Pottinger.—Sir J. C. Houncome seconded the motion. He referred the House to the beautiful memorir of Dr. Morrison and his son; and expressed his hops that some way would be found consistently with the forms of the House to effect the proposed provision—Sir R. Prazz, while he praised in the highest terms the sert ices of Dr. and Mr. Morrison, lamented the difficulty of accreting to a proposal which would constitute a precedent of the rhost embarrassing description. The cases were very numerous in the civil service where strong claims were brought before the Treasury, which there were no funds for meeting. In the Army and Navy, the State provided ponstons for widows, but in the civil service, the principle was that each person in the public employ should receive a liberal salary, out of which he was expected to make provision for his family. Therefore, unless in some very extraurdinary case, the public could not provide for the families of its servants. He would now specify the circumstances of this particular claim; and the House would judge whether they were of a nature so peculiar ageto warrant an exception. He accordingly stated the details of the case, and explained that Mrs. Morrison had been actually provided for to the extent of 2001, a set has a supoliment had been promised for the second son as soon as he should be of an age to receive it. On the whole, as compared with the surviving families of other eminent public servants, this family had been actually when he within the one would not press his motion

Literary Motices.

A New Spirit of the Age. Edited by R. II. Horne, Author of "Ocion," "Gregory VII.," &c. 2 vols. Smith, Elder, and Co.

Title chief value of these volumes will be found in their suggestiveness. Frequently have we heard it said, that "a good copy is better than a bad original." We deny. We deny point blank, the truth of this proposition. We would rather possess a painting, or a status, the production of a man of original genius, though the creative power might not have been of the highest order, than we would possess (unless as a matter of curiosity, or that it might convey to us some notion of the ideas of the originating artist,) the finest copy of the finest work of art that ever emanated from the mind and finnd of a master. We detest imita-tions: no mere imitator ever achieved greatness. Now, whatever may be said respecting Mr. Horne, he incurs no risk of being classed amongst imitators— amongst the copylsts of other people's fancies. Bad or good—and he is occasionally both—he is at feast an original. As we have said, the chief value of his book consists in its sug-gestiveness. He describes and characterises, after his own fashion, forty or more of the popular writers, &c. of the day:—Dickens—Lord Ashley and Dr. Southwood Smith— Ingoldsby— William and Mary Howitt— Dr. Pusey—the novelists, James, Mrs. Gore, Capt. Marryat, and Mrs. Trollope—Talfourd—Mines and Hartley Colemides. Sidner South A Robbinsha and Lavalley Colemides. ridge— Sidney Smith, A. Fonblanque, and Jerrold—Wordsworth and Leigh Hunt-Alfred Tennyson—T. B. Macaulay—Hood, and the late Theodore Hook—Harriet Martineau and Mrs. Jameson-Sherldan Knowles and Macroady-Miss E. B. Barrett and Mrs. Norton-Banim and other Irish novelists-Browning and Marston-Sir E. L. Bulwer-Ainsworth-Mrs. Shelley-Robert Montgomery-Thomas Carlyle-Henry Taylor and the author of "Festua," Sec.

In perusing Mr. Horne's strictures upon these authors, we doubt whether a single reader will, in any individual instance, be found to agree with the writer throughout. On the other hand, probably every reader will find something, in almost every article, to the critical justness of which he will be disposed to yield his assent; and, whether or not, a variety of suggestions will arise out of the matter perused. Few persons, we apprehend, will relinquish the volumes without reading them through. This remark, of itself, implies no slight degree of praise.

In many parts we consider the work to be much too sketchy; the phraseology frequently far-fetched, and affectedly mystical; and scarcely a page occurs in which, were we controversially disposed-for Mr. Horne views objects through very extraordinary media — we should not find much to oppose. To act thus, however, would be only to set up one opinion against another; and, for our parts, we would rather the allowed to enjoy our own quietly, very frankly conceding the same privilege to Mr.

Mr. Dickens holds the post of honour, in being first

Mr. Dickens holds the post of honour, in being first introduced. With a glance at Defoe, a parallel is drawn between Dickens and Hogarth; and the portrait of the former is thus amusingly, if not indicrously, sketched:

"Mr Dickens is, in private, very much what might be expected from his works, by no means an invariable concidence. He talks much or little according to his sympathics. His conversation is genial. He hates argument; in fact, he is unable to srgue—a common case with impulsive characters who see the whole truth, and feel it crowding and struggling at once for immediate uttorance. He never talks for effect, but for the truth or for the fun of the thing. He tells a story admirably, and generally with hundrouse exaggerations. His sympathics are of the broadent, and his literary tests appreciate all excellence. He is a great admirer of the poetry of Tenayson. Mr. Dickens has singular personal activity, and is fond of games of practical skill. He is also a great walker, and very much given to dancing fit Roger de Coverley. In private, the general impression of him is that of a first-rate practical intellect, with no nonsense about him. Seldedon, if ever, has any man been more beloved by contemporary authors, and by the public of his time. His portrait in the present work is extremely like him."

Upon Ingoldsby, Mr. Horne is mercilessly severe; nor is Mrs. Trollops, stor Ainsworth, in the slightest degree spared.

gree spared. To the broadth and force of the lady's bumour, he appears utterly insensible.

We transcribe the following passage from the stric-tures on Bulwer, because it involves the illustration of a beautiful truth. Speaking of Sir Edward Bulwer's romance of "Zanoni," some portions of the machinery of which, it will be recollected, are supernatural, Mr romanne of "Zanoni," some portions of the machinery of which, it will be recollected, are supernatural, Mr. Florse observes:—

"The character of Viola; the woman through whom Love useris his pre-smineros—bis 'psign starnal over all'—le exquititely draws in the first portion of the story. Her life as an actress, with the pathetic history of the musician Pisani, her father, are especially beautiful. The charm of the ideal is thrown over everything connected with her, and her purity. childlike and spotiesa, combined with her manasioned devolice to Zanoni, the hero, reader the picture perfect. Out of this lovely character, however, arises the grand fault of the work, as an ethical harmony. It is the compromise of her passion fur Zanosi by her maternal instinct over-massaring it. When she becomes a mother, she deserts her husband for the sake of her child. This is no here a grant and exalted love. It is too true that it happens very commonly in real life, but not with such a woman, and such a love. It was necessary to the course of the story to remove her from her great protector, yet some other means should have been invented. Deep nature is sacrificed to an immediate requisition of the narrative. But superatition could steps have been so strong as her love—because, as we have said before, a great and emobiling passion is the voice of tiod in the soul, and banishes all weak fears. The egulted faith of Zanoni, and the heart-broken intensity of affection in Viola under the separation, are finely done; had the re-union attit finer. They meet again in a daugeon in Paris in the Reign of Terror. Viola is condemned to the guillotic comes upon her; Zanoni, radiant in his youth and beauty, is there—"On to the Earlieve du Trone I frewas dar in the Reign inn, a vision of the procession to the guillotic comes upon her; Lie bridge but ween the sun and the shades so brief —brief as a sigh! "Mr. Macroady's character (we deal only with such elements of it as are directly or indirectly of public influence,) is made up or stronger opposites than is usual, however common those antaponiums are in forcible characters. He has great energies of action, and a morbid will. He has a limited imagination, with a large ambition. His imagination is alow and duli of vision, but quick and seculity to feel. It, therefore, continually misleads him beyond retreat. For this reason, his hasty judgments are always wrong, and his slow judgments futile from enhausted impulses. In these respects he has been much assisted by Mr. Serle. It is evidently the opicion of this gentleman that a cold dispassionate judgment is the only popular test of excitcul imaginations. His advice, therefore, is always jadleinus, and ineffectual. But it is quite a mistake to suppose that Mr. Macready is misled by the advice of friends. We are aware that Mr. Forster and Mr. Serle have been commonly annused of this; but we think very unjustly. Mr. Macready takes no advice but that which backs his own opicios. His constant errors in judgment show that they proceed from the same man. His spirit is a hot-headed steed, capable of leaping great conclusions; but he wants faith in those things, and is himself, which would enable him to succeed greatly, and when he does leap, he makes up for a long arrear of doubts by willtiness, and 'falle on the other side.' He has genial feelings, but a morbid fancy which troubles them. It paics him to laugh. His temperament is impetuous, his lopes drary, his paryouse high-minded, his opicions conflicting, and 'his luck against him,' with his own assistance. He boddy incursed the odium of allowing Anti-Corn-law meetings in Coveat Garden, besides giving an arm-aweeping slash at recent anxious in a farewell addram; and he made a speech to the poor Duke of Cambridge, on receiving a 'testimonial,' at which all his best friends blushed, and he himself, before the farce was concluded, which had cost so much pains to get up, wished a large trap-door would unboit titelf beneath his feet. a large ambition. His imagination is alow and dull of vision, but quick and seasitive to feel. It, therefore, continually mislands him farce was concluded, which had cost an much pains to get up, wished a large trap-door would unboit itself beneath his feet. wished a large trap-door would unbolt fireff beneath his feet.

As a patron of modern dramafic literature, he has been totally mistaken by others, and the less he ever attempts of this kind in future, the better for all parties. As a supporter of the Shakapersan drama, and all the fine old 'stock pieces,' he has not been encouraged according to his deserts; and, with all his faults, the want of sufficient patronage in his own country is discreditable to the age."

OSCARI, KING OF EWEDEN AND NORWAY.

The great qualities, the high achievements, and the renown of Charles John have hitherto eclipsed those of Oscar. Nevertheless we may confidently affirm, that the son is worthy of the father, and that he will continue to pursue the glorious path which the former has traced out.
Osear was born in Paris in July, 1799, and consequently he will shortly complete his 45th year.

At the time of his birth his father was commanding the Army of reserve on the Rhine, and was, in the same year, appointed Minister of War. His mother was Desirée Clary, the sister of Joseph Bonaparte's wife. In 1796 Napoleon had been a suitor for this lady's hand. In one of his letters he said, "I will insure to you a brilliant lot. Possibly I may pass away like a mateor; but I venture to predict that my passage will be long remembered demoiselle de Clary's father, a rich merchant at Marscilles, refused Napoleon (then General in-Chief of the Mademoiselle de Clary's father, a rich merchant at Maraeilles, refused Napoleon (then General-in-Chief of the Army in Italy), observing, that he thought one Bonaparte enough in his family.

In 1804, Oscar, then five years of age, joined his father, who was governor of the Kingdom of Hañover. He was taced at a school, where the soms of some of the best families in the country were his companions. His reducation took a German rather than a French direction, and he imbibed that toste for the literature and tanguages of the morth which he has constantly retained. Oscar came to Sweden with his father in 1810, since which time he has acarely ever quitted the country. He has so identified himself with Sweden, that he schoon speaks any other language than the Swedish; and he writes it with a degree of ourity, of which several of his printed works hear evidence. Immediately on his arrival in Sweden, the educat on of the young Prince was consigned exclusively to Swedish masters. The good truits of that education are manifested in his solid and extensive information and his truly national apirit.

Prince Oscar accombanied his father in the campaign in Norway in 1814, and thereby acquired some experience in warlike operations. He has a taste for the Military Art, though he is not exclusively devoted to it. He can magnetive with admirable skill a corps of Infastry or Cavalry, or both together. His knowledge of Artillory is attendive, readed Grand Master of the Artillery of the two kingdoms (Master-General of the Ordonace).

The variety of his tastes for different branches of Military science, has not prevented him from making very extensive acquisitions in several other departments of knowledge, particularly in philology and geography. Having been the pupil of Berzelius, so great is his knowledge of chemistry that Sir Hampiperson. Besides these emment qualities, the Prince expresses himself in public speaking with elegance and facility, and he has manifested extraordiosey takent in the features regular, his figure noble and extemporise in French.

His countemance is handsome, his features regular, his figure noble and well proportioned, and his hook is full of amenity, line manner duplays more of the calemass of a native of the north than the vivacity which might be expected in one of French extraction. He has well discharded all his high state duties as Frince Royal, and has at four different times, owing to the King's ill-health, had in his hands the government of the Ring's ill-health, had in his hands the government of the has, moreover, exercised the functions of Chancellor of the Universities of Uyasla, Land, and Christiania, of High Admiral, and, as we have already asid, of Commander of the Artillery. In consequence of his attention to the execution of those duties, and his careful study of everything relating to the two kingdoms, King Oscar acceude the throne better prepared and with the possession of more instruction than any Crown Prisus who has preceded him.

He married 30 years ago Josephine, the daughter of Engance Beanharnois, Dake of Leachtenberg (one of the great characters of our age, by a Princess of Bararia, sinter of the present King, Pour sous and one daughter see the issue of this marriage.

And leave debtors and done to grumble and gruen,
Och i travel away to Sierra Leone [1]
The land of case and plenty.
'That have you'll see the Meager Kings, !
All cover'd with goods and allow rugs.
And the height of offer beautiful things,
Knough to please and content ye.

The pearls and diagografs are met on the ground, And the richest of jewels in heaps abound, And the guides dust 3 is easily found.

In this land of sace and plenty. The sugar in loaves grows on the trees, And you small the panets in every brees, As it consists the lesson and orange seas, And all for authing to seent ye.

As enon as your foot touches the strand, The kings and princes in high command, Most cordinity shake you by the haud, In this land of eace and pleaty; Baying, "Come along with us and dise, We'll give you ale, whisky, and add purt-wine, And a due black lady to peer your time," That, I'v you're a priest, will tempt ye.

The Governor here religns like a King,
With Dukes, Earls, and Lords to attend on him,
And his pockets are lined with fashings of fin,<sup>3</sup>
In this land of each and plenty.
And when he ests slows to the in state,
"Its real Princesses that on him wait,
The real Princesses that on him wait,
To bill the glass and change his plate,
Whose beauty's enough to demont ye.

The merchants here are quite custent,
To charge for their gunda farse hundred per cent.,
And to make large highly are in no ways bent,
In this land of sace and plonly.
And the lawyers, too, are so kind and free,
As to inver dream of taking a fee,
Or squeezing a client que if riendly ples,

Bin, Can you inform your numerous readers why it that some regiments which were in position and under so at the battles of Busses and Tholouse do flot bear the honourable memorial on their colours? My old regiment meaning meaning of the state of the second at Tuolouse; it stormed a field-work, and lost a Field-Officer (Major Baker), and some 30 Non-commissioned Officers and privates in the successful assault, yet does not bear either Busaco or Tholouse on its colours. All the world knows that regiments which were not under fire at Waterloo yet wear the medal, and bear the memorial on their colours.

[The regiment alluded to would now obtain the distinctions if applied for. We know of many instances where, from the negligence of Officers in command at the time, honours well deserved were not claimed by them for their regiments, which have since been obtained through the application of their successors, who were actuated by different feelings. We further know several corps which to this hour have not on their colours the names of actions in which they shared the danger, but of which they have never shared the fame. .... ED.]

NAVAL ARCHITECTURE.

To the Editor of the Naont and Milliney Gazette.

Str.—The reported razeeing of the Disdalus, 43, gunfrigate, suggestion very important improvement upon the plan of making her a corwitte. I am disposed to think that a more efficient ship, in everyway, would be insured, if her present quarter-deak and forecastle were allowed to remain, but without carronades or guns, (except, perhaps. two long guns of good range for shere guns). Cut down the quarter-deck and forecastle bulwarks to the present height of the waist-hammock nettings, and by making these, fore and aft, as pliable as possible, I very much question whether such a ship would not sail with our best frigates, and certainly as well as the Magicianne. By metamorphosing 42 or 46 gun-frigates into corvettes, vast advantages are ascrificed, whather in peace or war! action sail-trimmers must have room as well as the men at the guns; but by making these work upon the same deck they must of necessity be in the way of each other. The same may be said of the Marines, who are now drawn up upon the poop, or wherever they can find a place; whereas, by keeping the quarter-deck over the heads of the men on the ngitting deck, these would have full power to set. In the event of a most fulling in action, this would most probably duable some or more of the gunz, if the lhip were a correcte, but this would be prevented by the above plan-

In time of peace the advantages of having a main-deck can only be appreciated by those who have served in a flush-decked vessel, and in a frigate in a tropical climate. When sickness assails a ship's company, who can describe the comforts of a main deck? The experiment is certainly worth making, for if unsuccessful—that is, if the ship could not be got through the water fast enough-ehe might be cut down after all; but to put a quarter-deck and fore-castle upon a covette would be rather an expensive job. The same principle would apply to line-of-battle slups. Cut off the peop of the old 74 gun-ships, take away their quarter-deck and forecastle gags, out down their bulwarks, and then try whether the man facilities of the results of the people of the old 74 gun-ships. and then try whether the new-lashioned ships are so very dawned gradually upon our ship builders, and the only fear now is, that they will carry their principle of gun-retrench-ment 100 far. "Monster" corvettes are objectionable, because they must carry a large complement of men, and one deck is not sufficient for their necessary comforts in case of airkness, and in climates where rain and bad weather prevail. The Dedulus might mount 32-pounders on her n deck, and I prophecy she would prove a fast, comfortable, and efficient ship. Your obedient servant, REMODELLING THE BILLIPIA.

To the Editor of the Naval and Ministry Gazette.

Sir,—As it has been several times stated that it is the intention of Government to remodel the Militia, permit me to offer, through your valuable Paper, the following suggestions:-That the ballot should take place every five years as formerly, so that in case of any emergency we might have our men in readiness for service. That a list of the Officers should be published twice a year in the Army List. That the lace should be of one pattern throughout the Service. That the half-pay of the Subal-terns should be increased from 45. per summ to the half-pay of the Army. That our Staffs at head-quarters should be made efficient by filling up the vacant Adjutancies from the h.-p. of the Line, and by penaioning off the old Milita Serjeants, &c. That the regiments, instead of being named after their counties, should be known by their per manent nambers; for instance, the "Warwick Militia" should be termed the "Soth Militia."—I have the honour to be, &c. &c. A MILITIA CAPTAIN.

THE MILIGIA.

To the Editor of the Naoni and Military Gazette.

Sin,—I have read with much interest and satisfaction an article in your valuable Paper, relative to the very disorganised state of the Militis, and its total inefficiency should that form be unddenly called upon to act, in case of any audden uyasion or outbreak. It is most true that this once most valuable force has dwindled down to a mere nothing, and a Militia Officer is considered as a mere nothing, freling a diffidence in mounting his red coat, or taking his rank in society as Colonel, Major or Captain. This is a great piece of folly. Why should be not feel a proper pride in holding his commussion?—his commission is as good and as valid in its way as one of the regular Service; for I hold that the regular Militia is to all intents and purposes, when embodied, a branch of the regular Service, and has ever proved itself a most valuable Why, then, is the once valuable and constitutional force to be allowed to die a natural death, merely to save the country a few thousands of pounds? Should the force be again embedied, the sum required would appear large It may on paper, but the country would hardly feel it be called economy, and a wretched economy it is-penny-wise and pound-foolish in every sense of the word. For even at the present time the country is paying some thousands of pounds for the keeping up a set of useless, old men on the Militia Staffs, who are almost all worn out and of little or no avail as an acting body. The proposal in the article alluded to, of raising a third is good as far as it goes, but why confine it to a third of the Militia, or to the immediate district around the metropolis? - this would be only a half measure. There are other parts of England which require an assistant force to act in conjunction with the Regulars, even more than the Metropolitan districts, and contain each a population of fine hardy men as any in Her Majesty's dominions, and gentlemen of very large landed property and influence in the county, who hold commissions in their Militia. Take. for instance, Lanceshire, Yorkshire, and many other northern countries bordering on the British and Irish channels. Should an invasion take place, why need it be the Thames? they might take the Humber, the Mersey, the Tyno, and strike at once at our large mercantil interest. This would be an serious to the country, or more so, than the metropolis itself. If, therefore, a plan is to be adopted, of raising a portion of the Militia, let the distribution be equal over England, if not of Scotland, and select those regiments whose complement of Officers most complete, and who hold the most important stations in the county. I will renture to say that all gentlemen holding commissions in the Militis, would be delighted to offer their services, and though the expense on paper might appear large, the country would hardly feel it, and no well-disposed persons would grudge it. Let me hope that this idea, once started, may produce something which will cheer the hearts of Militiamen, raise us from oblivion, and let our Sovereign and country see what we really are. AN OLD MILITIA OFFICER.

YNN'S NEW

W. H. ALLEN & CO., LEADENHALL STREET, LONDON.

This day is published,

I YNN'S NEW STAR TABLES,

L. Price its., adepted be practical purposes for Tweaty-two yours, commencing January, 1843, for the use of Mariners, Circ.
nometer Makers, Ameteur Astronomers, &c., with an Appendix, which together contain all the principal problems for determining the Lallude and Longitude at sea or on abore, with several valuable Tables, Engles, and Examples, to render them of daily and extensive utility, including the use of the Transit Inatrument, Artificial Horizon, the use of the Crimital Globe to Mariners, and Practical Directions for knowing the Stars.

Among other advantages of this prospective work, are these, viz.:—The Cuimination, or time of the passage overthe meridian of Greenwich is given (in Table B) for every day of the Year 1844, for forty-four of the principal fixed Entrs; and at the same opening of the book (in Table C), is a simple sorrection for reducing the culmination to any other meridian. Again (in Table B) to 1864, not only showing the time when to observe the maridian altitudes of the English for the latitude, but to facilitate the computation of the Table in the English from the observed altitudes of Stars; thus, baving found the Houn Anolus of the Etnr, lessen it, by the quantity mawering thereto in Table B; the remainder added to, or subtracted from the reduced culmination, will be the mean time at the ship, and hence the longitude by clironometers or by hinder observations; independently of the Sun's or Star's right appeals of the secund on a fine, or of the siderest time at mean many with their teclous, though indispapashir reductions, which has more or less employed by other methods hereatoure used.

On sheet, the work affords a very simple and accurate means of determining the rates or guing of ohrunometers, clocks, which are often an afforded by atmospherical refraction, as to give the inexperienced observer an unjust opision of the performance of his chronometer, which is avolved by

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Ganetic

SIR,—It appears to be understood as an arranged matter that two Battalions of the Rl. Marines are shortly to be sent to take garrison duty in the Mediterranean, and it has also been rumoured as probable, how truly I know not, or pro-posed, that a proportion of this branch of the Service be likewise deepatched to North America for the same purpose. On the propriety of this arrangement as regards the gallant corps which will be benefited by its provisions, I abstain from offering remark. The Ri. Marines have high claims to favourable notice, and are deserving of every consideration. But when it is gravely affirmed (as it has been affirmed with exceeding gravity,) that this new system is to prove a boon to the Infantry of the Line, I must beg leave to dissent from the assertion. What! a boon to be almost dealed entrance to the Mediterranean? to be thrust, in a great measure, from Causda and Nova Scotta, for the pleasant privilege of enjoying, in a greater degree than at present, the soft fever-breezes of Scinde? of inhaling with more extended licence the subtle venomdamps of Hong-Kong? or of basking in torrid luxury beneath the vertical sunbeams of Hindostan? To be told, in short, in blandest of official accents, that for the future they must all but resign the most eligible foreign quarters, and content themselves with those which are least desir able? This may be & boon, Sir-I will not quarrel with a word—but it is a boon that the Army-Infantry, however much they may desire the welfare of their distinguished brothers-in-arms, the Infantry of the Marine, would infinitely prefer, did the choice lie with themselves to reject and to receive.

It is not foreign corvice-far from it-which the Army dislike or would avoid; neither is it in all cases the length of time regts. may be kept abroad, though this is eccasionally irksome; but it is the poison breath of some stations which is falt as a misfortune, the hostility of their atmosphere to animal life and health, added to their generality lengthing which he improves the acceptant of a graphical position, which, by imposing the necessity of a long and expensive homeward voyage, prevents many from asking for leave of absence, even when simpaired constitution or important private affairs call for a temporary return to the country of their birth; to say nothing of those natural sympathies all right-minded persons cherish for the friends of their youth far distant, their mearest kindred estranged by absence, and early ties ruptured by the neccesities of the Service, and the requirements of its duties.

It is observable, too, that amid these ramours and pro positions there is no word uttered about a proposition of the West Indian duty being performed by the Rl. Marines. The Mediterranean is a pleasant station; has a delightful climate; doubtless let the Marines go there. Canada, too, is not bad; New Brunswick tolerable; Nova Scotia undeniably good; let the Marines go thither likewise. But for the West Indies; there is much fever to be got in the West Indies; death is frequent, and the land-orab instant in attendance; ennui is rife; the musquito abundant-more abundant than agreeable; let the Army keep these, in God's name, not forgetting the black corps

78th-A private letter from a Non-Com. Officer of this gallent regiment, and at present doing duty with his corps, under the command of Sir C. Napier, in India, states that the left wing joined the right on 22d Dec. last. It left Hombay on the 18th of that month in the frigate Auckland, for Scinde. The regiment has suffered in some degree from fever and ague, &c. but the Highlandors are in excellent spirits, and are much respected by their brave countryman and Commander, Sir C. Napier The following passage records a providential escape which the writer had from drowning:—

"We left Bombay for Beinde 18th Dec., 1845, and, on our arrival, I remained on hourd, to see all my company's baggage put on shore. We lay about two-and-a-half miles from land, and about seven miles from camp; we lost the tide, and had to remain in the boats until the tide rose again. I was so sager to be with the company, that another Berjeant and to remain in the boats until the tide rose again. I was so sager to be with the company, that another Berjeant sho sager to be with the company, that another Berjeant sho sager to be with the company of the camp, across the beach, the searest way we could get. This was in the evening, jost about the time that the sun was setting. We continued our route till it was quite dark, and by that time we were fairly done up for want of everything; both shoes and stockings were lost, and weep animing in clay, so that got so weak that I was obliged to give up. I was now five miles from the camp; and my courade left me for lost. Here I remained for some time, till I got in a small jungle or shrubbery. The lide came in on me at seven o'clock, r.m., and rose gradually natil it came up to the lower builton of my cout; judge what a state I was in. It being quite dark, I saw a light at a distance, but calling for assistance was in vais. As my last resource, I took of my such interesting that I was lost for ever; parties went out in all directions is search of me, but none could find me. Well, I made my way out by ten o'clock a.m. the following morning, with a hard fight, and was received at the camp by my comrades in the Highland and hospitable manner of our country, by offering me everything that could be procured. I got a slight coid in consequence, but now I am quite recovered from the effects, and enjoy excellent health, as indeed I have ever since I left England."

79th...Gibraltar.—Col. Hon. L. Maule this year inti-

79th-Gibraltar-Col. Hon. L. Maule this year intimated, as an encouragement to his men for paying proper attention to their ball practice, that he would award prizes to the best marksmen of each company; and, to the best shot in the corps, a gold medal, to be worn by the soldier on his coat on all occasions. The Colonel having previously distributed his minor prizes, decided on the evening of the 23d March as being favourable for the purpose of firing for the first prize, as he was taking his reg., at all events, to the neutral ground, for field exercise. On its arrival, and immediatly after formation into thres sides of a square, seven competitors stepped from the ranks, and were supplied with three rounds of ball each; the target was placed at 120 yards' distance, and each soldier fired his quota of rounds before he made room for the next; the firing was excellent, but the prize was borne off by private John Anderson, of Captain Monro's company, who hit the target three; great excitement prevailed among the soldiers during the contest for the prize. His Excellency the Governor happened to be on the ground and the Col. requested him to present Private Anderson with the medel. The gallant General acceded to the Colonel's request, and addressed the soldier in nearly the following words: —" He had much pleasure in having the opportunity afforded him by Colonel Maule, in presenting Private Anderson with a gold medal, he being the successful marksman on this occasion. His Exc. further said that the soldier was a credit to the distinguished reg. to which he belonged; he wished the soldier long life and prosperity to wear it, and hoped the soldier's conduct would be always such as to merit the approbation of his Officers, and the esteem of his brother soldiers." The medal is a splendid one, of a large size, and suspended by a regimental tartan ribbon, gold clasp and ring. 80th—This reg. proceeds to India this year, from N.S.W.

83d-This reg. at Northampton, and the 64th Reg. at Weedon, changed quarters on the 8th April, 85th-Hd.-qrs. have arrived at Barbadoes from Antigua 86th—The gallant Col. Deriuzy landed his splendid regiment, 1100 strong, on the 8th February, at Kurrachee, time enough to join in the grand banquet given to Sir Charles Napier on the 17th, who delighted his hosts by the frankness and amonity of his manners. He made them a heart-stirring speech. The troops, about 4000, were in camp, and were, about the lat April, to follow Sir Charles to Hyderabad. The heat was great; but all ranks animated with the true spirit, longing for a brush.

91st Depot-About 70 of this depot will leave Albany Barrecks, and go out in the British Sovereign freightship, to join the service companies.

-Lieut. Cruice, an old and deserving Officer of more than 19 years' standing, succeeds to a company in consequence of the death of Brev.-Major Tathwell, at Dover, on the 4th inst., which event we announced last week. Lieut. Cruice, formerly belonged to the 58th Reg., from which he was promoted June 13, 1830, to a Lieutenancy in 62d Reg., and served for some time in India with the latter corps. He was appointed to 95th Reg. in 1835, and embarked for the service cos. in May 1841, since which time he has been stationed in Ceylon. He is descreedly respected by the entire regiment.

98th—We learn that the Cornwell transport, with Lieut-Cel. Gregory, several Officers, and upwards of 300 men of the 98th Rogt. arrived at Hong-Kong on the 27th Dec. This vessel fell in with a cance in the Pacific Ocean, 200 miles from any land, manned by four natives, whom the Master took on board in a very exhausted state. The poor creatures appeared highly delighted at their rescue, and on their arrival at Hong-Kong were taken under the protection of Government. Although no person has yet en able to interpret their language, the master attendant is of opinion that they may earn a comfortable livelihood, as boatmen, in Government employment.

3d W.l. Reg.—The following Officers embarked this day on board the freight-ship Superior, for Sierra Leone, vis., Capt. Haining, Licut. Watson, and Ess. Davidson.

The half-yearly inspections of the Army in Lieland will not commence before next month.

The 80th Regiment and three other regiments from the United Kingdom, not yet named, are destined to relieve the 55th, 3d, 13th, and 40th Regiments. Which regiment gues to Chius, (if any,) is quite uncertain.

General John Missel died in-t week at his seat in Dorsetabire, at the age of 79. He antered the Army 7th. Feb., 1781; was made Lieut, June 25, 1785; Capt., July 31, 1790; Maj., Nov., 30, 1792; Lieut. Col., Aug. 24, 1795; Col., April 29, 1802; Mal. Gen., Oct. 25, 1809 Zigity-Gen., June 4, 1814; and General, Jun. 10, 1837; General Michel served at the siege of Fort St. Phitip, in the jaland of Minorce, and was taken prisoner at its aer-render. He was father of the gallant Lieut.-Col. Mishel, of the fith Poot, and who, we believe, inharits a considerable fortune.

Colonel A. F. Mackintosh, K. H., from Euniskillen, is appointed Assistant Adjutant-General at Belfast, v. Colonel Napier, appointed Deputy Adjutant-Cien. in Ireland.

Letters from Hong-Kong, of the 4th Jan., announce the arrival, on the 27th Dec., of the Caster trigate, with Major-Gen. and Mrs. D'Aguilar. The new Commander of the forces, we understand, is likewise communicated as Lieut Governor. The General and Lady, on landing, proposeded by invitation to the hospitable residence of the Hon. Major Caine, Cidel Magistrate, and Mumber of Council, whose guests they promised to remain until a suitable abode could be obtained for them. General D'Aguitar had declined assuming the command of the troops until the return of Lord Saltonn from Manila, h event was hourly expected. A negotiation was in progress with the Chiuses government for the evacuation by our troops of Kooleagnoo, on the coast of Amoy; should this messure be carried—and there appeared no doubt upon the subject—the whole of the 18th Regt, will be concentrated at Chusau; a consummation, our cor-respondent adds, devoutly to be wished, masmuch as Chuen has proved very healthy during the past year, whilst Koolungsoo still retains the character of being a sickly station. Under this arrangement Koolungsoo is proposed as the residence of our Consulate, instead of Amoy.

STATE OF DISCIPLINE AT THE ROYAL MILTARY ACADEMY, WOOLWICH .- The Scattish Episcopul Times of the 6th inst. in reference to the case of Gentleman Cadet Black, states, "that the boy no sooner found himself within its - (the Academy's) precincts, than he was anposed to personal maltrastment of the most excessive and the most unremitting kind. The injury received by him was not merely that rough usage which boys at a public school may be anniosed to Bestow on one another: it was injury carried to such an extent, that, a work after it had accurred, respectable medical gentlemen in Scotland granted certifionten that his body was black with hruses. On his return to Woolwich, accompanied by one of his parents, that parent was informed, by Sir George Whitmore, Identa-theveruer of the Academy, that as some of the Cadeta would certainly be punished for their soudest, he (she Lieutenant-Governor) could not be answerable for the cansequences !--meaning thereby, that a renowal of outrage would probably be the result as regarded Muster Black, and that no protection against such oursige could be guaranteed. The consequence was exactly what was here predicted. Two Cadeta wem diamissed, -nihera auffered minor punishment,—an protection was given to Cadet Black,—the evil passions of the other Cadety made him again a victim,—and he field a second time. He field to go down on his knees to his parent, to implore that he might be placed in any profession, however abject or laborious, rather than be compelled again to renew his sufferings at Wuolwich. We put the following question: When the mother of Cadet Black took her son back to Woolwich, after his first flight from it, did, or did not, she request from Sir George Whitmore, the Lieutenaut-Governor of the Royal Military Academy, protection for her son against similar cruel treatment for the future? and did, or did not, Sir George Whitmore say, in reply to her, that 'Cudet Black and his fellow C'adeta would not get on smoothly? '....that ' he was certain her son's attention would be worse than ever? - and that, 'if one or two of the latter were dismissed on his account, he would not answer for the consequences ?' " [Again we say put down the abominable system of fagging instanter.

Grand Figures in Charitan. The troops of the garrison, consisting of the 1st Division of RI. Marines, the 58th Reg., the Four Company Depot of the 28th, together with the Provisional Barralion, assendid in review order on Monday on Chatham-flues, under the command of Sir T. Willshire, Barti, K.C.B., attended by Birgade-Maj. J. Doyle O'Brien and two Aiccode. Camp, Capt. Vallant, 40th, and Capt. Way, 29th. The number of men under arms was upwards of 2000, and the day being extremely fine, the lines were covered with boilday folks, and must of the gentry of the inwas and neighbourhood were present in corruges to witness the brigade exercise of the troops. For the first part of the review the troops, with their bands and colours, marched past the Communidate and his personal staff in slow and quick time. They were afterwards formed into three battalions. The first barration consisted of the They were afterwards formed into Rl. Matthes, under the command of Lieut. Cots. Pos-guston and T. Peebles, with Adjutant Gascayna. The second buttation was formed by the 58th Regiment, under the command of Lieut-Col. R. 11. Wynyaid, and Mejor C. Bridge, with Adjusted M Lency. The third buttation was comprised of the 28th and the Provisional The third Battalion, under the command of Lieut-Col. Thomas 67. Kelly, with Major Robinson, of the 2d Queen's. The three battalions were formed statf eight divisions of 24 files each p and each division had two Officers and three Sergennte, exclusive of the Officers and Berjeunts of the colours. The battalians having advanced from the right, changed front to left, and then formed a line. and changed again front to right. The company of each buttalion, after underguing many other Military movements of an interesting nature, and forming a line, broke into columns of companies left and front, and marched of the ground by sections, the outh taking the direction of Brompton Burracks, the Marines to their divisional head-quarters, and the Provisional Battalion to their quarters in Chatham Barracks. The whole of the troups went through their evolutions with the greatest precision. It is the intention of Sir T. Wittshire to hold these field-days every wilk during the automate fluidits.

COAST-OFABD.

Appointment.—Commander William Edmonstone, R.N., to be Inspecting-Commander at Larga, N.B., v. Commander Jos. Maynard, R.N., resigned.

Pontamouth, April 12.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Vernon arrived on Tuesday from Lisbon, and the following day orders came down for her to com plete stores, and proceed to Cork, taking on board 100 Murines, for service of the ship-not to be landed, unless required. These men were embarked yesterday afternoon, and the Vernon sailed this day. She did not see the Malabar, but it is known that she is at lasbon. Black Eugle, steum-yacht, came back on Tuesday, but without any of the members of the Admiralty. The British Sovereign freight-ship is at Spithead, and has emburked upwards of 100 Officers and men of the 91st Reg., from Cowes, for the Cape; and, with some of the 12th on board, is to convey them to that colony and the Magnitus. She will saif forthwith. Thames convict-ship for Bermuda, is expected very soon. Neither Daring or Osprey are commissioned; both in the Basin ready. Colingrecord is in a forward state, and will be commissioned by the end of the month. Rudney goes out of dock next spring-tides, if she can be completed; and, it is reported, she is to be commissioned with Collingwood. Prometheus has been moved into dock, to undergo the necessary repairs; her former first Engineer is lent to her, to assist in her refit, Pantation has arrived at Devenport from the coast, bringing some Officers from the Madagascar, who are considered important witnesses in the Water Britch's baracoon law proceedings. Acourge is building in took, and Prince Regent cutting down in dock. Emeral has been to Southampton for the invalids which came home in the Dee, West India packet. Ships in Port. St. Vincent, Victory, Excellent, Victoria and Albert yacht, Black Eagle.

Phymouth, April 11.—(From our own Correspondent.)
April 4th—Arrived the Petercl packet, G, Lieut.-Com.
Greser, from Falmouth; she had some trifling defects made good, and completed has stores; her crow will be made good, and completed her stores; her crow paid sages in a day or two, after which she returns to Falmouth. 6th—Salled the Sinbad tender, with stores, for Portsmouth. 10th—Moorings were laid down in the Siound this day, and it is said the Caledonia, 120, (flagship) Capt A. Milne, will move from the Harbour, the 12th inst., and occupy them. Malabar, 72, Capt. Sir George Sartorius, is hourly expected from Lisb in, and is ordered to be paid off at this port. 11th—Went out of Harbour the Caledonia, and stood to the westward on a marour the Caledonia, and stook to the weatward on a short trip, to stretch her rigging, and returns to her moorings in the Sound in the source of the day; Admiral Sir D. Milne and Roar-Admiral Sir Samuel Pym, went out in her. Arrived the Pantaloon, 10. Lieut.-Com. Charles li. Lapidge, from the Coast of Africa. In Harbour—Nan Josef, America, Confiance et. In the Sound—Caledonia, Peterel, Pantaloon

SHERRNES, April 11,—(From our own Correspond-ant.)—On Thursday night last the Boscowen, 70, arrived here in tow of the African and Monkey steamers. On Tues day she was hauled into the basis; she will be docked and coppered shortly. On Monday the Wye, convict hospitalship, passed down from Chatham in tow of the abovementioned steamers for Woolwich. Same day the Ruren cutter, Lieut. Com., John Stephen, arrived from Piymouth. The Camperdown, flag-ship, has doffed her winter rigging and begins to look smart, perhaps, preparatory to going to aca. All haste is being made to get the Cygnet ready for sea; it is thought she will be put on trial with the new 12's; she is to be reported ready by the 1st of May. Ganges is detained in dock to be coppered. Amasen is progressing in being reseed; Fulture steamer in her fittings for commission; Chichester for demonstration. In Harbour-Camperdown, Ocean, Raven, and African,

H.M.S. Madagazzar, Capt. John Poote, sailed from Ascension for the Cape de Verd Islands on the 7th Feb., leaving there H.M.B. Pantaloon, Lieut.-Com. Lapidge, about to sail for England, and H.M.B. Harolne, Lieut.-Com. Foote, about to sail for St. Pauls labels and and the South Capt. de Loando and the South Coust. The Madagaseur left St. Helena on the 8th of Dec.; she is ordered home, and expects her relief daily. In the mean time she proceeds to the Cape de Verds, for the purpose of ascertaining the exact position of a dangerous rock (called the Leltar Rock), said to lie about 14 miles N.E. of the Island of Boë-Vista. H.M.'s st.-v. Hydra, Commander Young, left Ascension for St. Pauls de Loando on the a oung, sett Ascension for St. Pauls de Loando on the 18th Dec., having on board the British Commissioner for the Mixed Slave Court at that cirg; and on the same day H. M. B. Alert, Commander Bosarquet, sailed for Sierra Leone. H. M. B. Star, Commander Dunlap, arrived at Ascension on the 4th Jan., and sailed a few days afterwards for Wydat.

H.M.S. Madagascar arrived at Porto Praya, Island of St. Jago, 27th Feb. H.M.S. Iris, Capt. Mundy, and H.M.S. Satellite, Capt. Rowley, had sailed that morning for Bruxils. H.M.S. Hyaolath was at Bos-Vista about ten days before, having on board Mr. Macauley, the Chief British Commissioner to the Mixed Slave Court there, and had sailed for Sierra Loune. were lying at Porto' Praya, the United States frigate Macedonian, Capt. Mayo, bearing the broad pendant of Commodore Perring, and the Portuguese brig-of-war Vauga. The Macedonian sailed on 6th March for Madeira, and the Madagassar the same day for Ray Vanta Bon-Vinta.

H.M.'s steamer Thunderbolt, which arrived in Table Bay from a croize on the 20th January, captured three slave-vessels, having on board 1283 Negroes. They exhibited the usual amount of unspeakable misery, and the deaths, in spite of all care since the capture, have been numerous. By vigilance and skilful movements, the Thunderbolt is said to have secured these vessels without a church of the capture.

guns in the bow and stern, apparently 12-pounders, which, together with the musketry, gave the practice the appearance of reality. The large guns are adapted to these boats upon a new principle. They are made to ship and unship in a way heretofore, we are informed, unpractised. Thus they are fitted with the improved slides, by which, with the use of an inclined plane, the guns can, in a few moments and with less trouble and labour than in any way before experienced, be converted into ballast by re-moval into the bottom of the boat, and can be as quickly remounted. Such an unusual sight drew some hundred of persons to the ramparts of the town, who were highly gratified spectators of the mock gallantry of our modern tars. This kind of practice is admirably adapted to bring seamen forward in this mode of Naval warfare, and infnitely preferable and better calculated to inspire an ambi-tion to enter the Service than the dull monotony of the daily avocations in a guard-ship. The tars themselves seemed much invigorated by their exercise. The squadron having tacked about for upwards of half an hour, much to the delight of the assembled multitude, pulled into harbour, and returned to their ship.

CHANNEL HARROURS. -The Commission for considering the several matters connected with the construction of a harbour in the Channel will be composed of the fol-lowing members:—Admiral Sir Byam Martin, G.C.B., President; Lieut. General Sir Howard Douglas, Bart., G.C.B.; Rear-Admiral Deans Dundes, C.B.; Captain Sir W. Symonds, R.N.; Captain John Washington, R.N.; Lieut.-Colonel Colquboun, R.A.; Lieut.-Colonel Alder-eon, R.E.; Sir John Pelly, Captain Fisher, R.N.; and James Walker, Esq., President of the Society of Civil Engineers.

Two of the new experimental 12-gun brigs, the Osprey and Daring, the former built by Mr. Blake, the Master Shipwright of Portsmouth, and the latter by Mr. White. of Cowes, will be brought forward for commission with all or cowes, will be brought forward for commission with all possible despetch. They have both been built within three months, are beautiful vessels, and sit gracefully on the water. The dimensions, &c., of the two vessels, as furnished us, are as follows:—

TORRES STRAITS .- H.M.S. Fly has survoyed a passage hitherto little known. An island stands nearly in the centre; and thus there are two channels, one of three miles to the northward and four to the southward. Capt, Blackwood intends to recommend that a beacon light be placed on the island. — Hobart Town Advertiser, Nov. 17.

NIGER EXPEDITION .- Mr. John Duncan, one of the survivors of the jate fatal expedition to the Niger, in which he held the post of draughtsman, is about to return to Western Africa, and follow out the path of discovery in its wilds. Mr. D. is a native of Galloway, and, we helieve, well qualified for labours which so many of our distinguished countrymen have shared. He will be accompanied by Mr. Mostat, from Ayrshire, a botanist, and Mr. Wright, a liberated African, from the banks of the Niger. Dumfries Standard.

The orders for the return to England (to be paid off) of the Queen, 110, flag-ship of Vice-Adm. Sir E. Owen, in the Mediterranean, have been countermanded, the inten-tion of reducing the Mediterranean fleet to one ship of the line being very properly given up; consequently the three line of battle ships, Queen, 110; Formidable, 84; and Indus, 80, will remain on the station until the completion of their full period of service.

A GREEK PIRATE.—There have, on several occasions, lately appeared some brief particulars respecting the daring depredations of a Greek piratical vessel up the Mediternentioned steamers for Woolwich. Same day the Raven nutter, Lieut.-Com., John Stephen, arrived from Plynouth. The Camperdown, flag-ship, has doffed her winter tigging and begins to look smart, perhaps, preparatory to come to get the Cygnet eady for sea; it is thought she will be put on trial with men new 12'a; she is to be reported ready by the 1st of flay. Ganges is detained in dock to be coppered. Ame. In progressing in being raseed; Fulture steamers in larebour—Camperdown, Gasan, Raven, and African, Dealt, April 11.—(From our own Correspondent.)—

the Thunderbolt is said to have secured these vessels deprended these vessels without a struggle.

The Winokester, 50, with the flag of ReavAdm, the Hon. J. Percy, C.B., was in Simbn's Bey, on 30th Jan., sacked, and an English bark sunk by her, and that within the space of a very short time. From the descriptions given of this vessel by commanders of vessels who have setter been planetered or chased by her, it is rather singular that none of H.M.'s men-of-war have yet come athwart day aftersoon, seven boats, well manued and armed, belonging to the flag-ship St. Piacent, came out of the harbour—Camperdown, Ocean, Raven, and African, terry, opened a sharp and vigorous fire upon each other.

From the de Liverpool, had been chased by a suspicious looking bark on the 2d of that month, off Cape Passarot; and, from certain circumstances attending the chase, the one in question, there is little doubt, is that seem. In this linstance, Capt. Hammond states, that when first seen she had her courses clewed up, with her topsails on the cap, but upon his hauling to the wind she immediately let fall her courses, hoisted her topsail, and set topgellant mils, and gave chase after him. He was compelled to tack three times, and only escaped upon several vessels heaving in When first seen she was about a mile distant, by aight. which Capt. Hammond was enabled to note her appearance more perticularly. She had a small heart painted white on her stern, showed no boats, and from the rapidity of her movements must have been well manned. The chief of her depredations must have been between Cadiz and It is estisfactory to know that Her Majesty's Government are acquainted with her depredations.

Rear-Adm. Francis William Fane, whose denuase on the 28th ult. at Bath was recorded in our last Gasette, entered the Navy on 15th April, 1795, and within eight years and a half from that date he obtained his Post rank, having passed through the inferior grades in less time than any Flag Officer on the list, with the exception of two of the Plag Officer on the list, with the exception of two of the distinguished members of the present Board of Admiralty, and another gallant Admiral. His repid promotion, however, was not dispreportionate to his gallant services. He was Midshipman of the Terpsichere frigate in her gallant action with the Spanish frigate Mahonesa, in 1796, and in that same vessel distinguished himself in the action with the Franch frigate Vestula, which ship, after desperate fighting for two hours, was captured by the Terpsickers. Mr. Fane received a severe wound in this conflict. When is command of the Cambrian be was distinguished for his zest and activity in co-operating with the Spanish patriots on the coast of Catalonia; but unfortunately was made prisoner, in 1810, while commanding a detachment in a gallant attempt to capture several armed vessels at Palamas. The dates of his com-mission are:—Lieut., 12th Jan., 1779; Commander, 28th April, 1802; Captain, 30th Aug., 1802; and Rear-Admiral, 10th Januery, 1837.

Paizs Money.—The Usestle of last night contains a notice dated April s, to the Officers and company of H.M."s brig Grecium, William Mnyth, Eag., Commander, that an account proceeds of slave and tonnage bounties for the slave vessels Janesées, seized 28th April, 1843, and Mineren, seized 28th April, 1843, will be deposited in the registry of the High Court of Admiralty on 19th lint., and also a notice, dated April 9, to the Officers and company of H.M.X. Waterwick, Lieut. Henry James Matoun, Commanding, that account proceeds of refund of Exchequer and Treasury Ises for the Spanish feluces Ni, seized 27th May, 1829; of excess of expenses and tonnage bounties for the Trimple, ecized 22d July, 1843; for the Felix Trimperals, seized 31d Dec., 1841; and for the Dagestos de Mendille, seized 32d Sept., 1842; of refund of expenses, slave and tomage bounties for a launch, name unknown, with 50 slaves, seized 8th Feb., 1842; a galley, name unknown, with 50 slaves, seized 8th Feb., 1842; a galley, name unknown, seized 9th Feb., 7842; and refund of expenses for a boat, name unknown, seized 21d Jun., 1843 (restored), will respectively be deposited in the registry of the High Court of Admiralty, on 10th inat., agreeably to act of Purliament.

MALTA, March 39.—Mr. Thomas Dixon Penrose was yesterday again committed on another charge of falsitying the signature of Lieut. Spark, commanding fl.M.'s atcamer Pulyphrane, quant a bill of exchange drawn upon the Lords of the Admiralty for 350l. This bill was discounted by Mesers. Kuluna & Sons, upon the condition that it was not to be femitted to England until the expiration of six munths. We wonder that any mercantile house should be so inexperienced in business as not to know that the desire to withhold a Government bill from presentation in due course, at once involves the transaction is maspicion; and surely the drawing of a bill upon the Lords of the A able difficulties, from the destruction, by a delege of wet weather, at the very moment they were most wanted, of the newly-constructed roads and bridges, finally meabared, with the collected treasures, at the mouth of the liver on the 19th March, when I.M.S. Medan, Commander Warden (who for some five weeks previous had been indefatigably engaged in personally superintending the packing and removal of the markies from the valley, where they have lain strewn about and moisturbed for centuries, never they have lain strewn about and moisturbed for centuries, never they have lain strewn about and moisturbed for centuries, never they have lain strewn about and market to effect their embarkation, but it came on to blow so heavily that in towing the lighter over the bar, the hawsers merted, and the pinnace and two cutters got swamped and beached. Several of the pinnace and thrown violently out of the hoats by the sea, and Mr. Hore, a Mate of the Guess, and three men, were with difficulty resoned from a watery grave. Unable to proceed with the embarkation, or even to communicate with the shore, the Medan had to retrace her way back, leaving some thirty Omcers and men with the ship's boats, benice the exploring party, ou the sainds, expensed to the inclemency of the weather, without any other sholar than the bashes thereabouts (for all but two small tents had been already shipped), until the 15th, when the wosther fulled autificiently to emble the gleanner to return, and by the 18th every one was anugly housed on board, with 20 sease of marbles end cents, leaving on the back some other seven cases, containing the na waldy portions of the hears and chismers tombs, witics must remain until such time as a larger vessel in seast to indeter

The steamer them steered for Macri, to water, and on the 30th size hove to off Rhodes, where the Captain and Mr. Fellows landed, in return the Pacha of the piace the acknowledgments of the British Gowernment for the facilities and persecution to had afforded the expedition, the Xantius district forming a portion of the Pachalic of Rhodes, where also the lighters were left. On the evening of 30th the steamer again proceeded on her voyage, intending to make the best of her way to Malta; but on the 31st, is consequence of a gale of wind from the south and westward, she was forced to put into Sude, in the Island of Candia, and did not leave until the 3sth. Throughout the 35th, and a part of the 30th, she encountered quite as strong a gale from the northward and eastward, when abe made fair way, at the rate of ten miles an hour, but on the 37th and 35th the wind headed her, blowing agnessively hard from the westward, and although she made Malta coon after Boon on the batter day, it was not until 16 at might that she came to an anchor, awing to the heavy sarge of marbles she had on board. The vessel haz suffered considerably, and will require a thorough overhauling there she proceede, as it is said it is intended she shall, to England. Mr. Hawkiar, who helects of interest for a future campaign, is the only one of the party, besides two who have died, who has not returned. Great praise is due to Capt. Warden and the Officers of his vessel and the expedition under his command, for having so antistoctority performed the artions service, and it will no doubt affird the friends of another zealous Officer, (tom. Narrative of the Voyages and Services of the Namesis, from 1840 to 1843; and of the Combined Naval and Military Operations in China ; comprising a Complete Account of the Colony of Hong Kong, and Romarks on the Cheracter and Habits of the Chinese. From Notes of Commander W. H. Hall, R.N. With Personal Observations, by W. D. Bernstt, Esq., A.M., Ozon. 2 vots. Svo. H. Colburn.

TAKING it in all its views and bearings, this is probably the most important publication that has appeared respect-ing our late contest with China. Mr. Bernard is not only ing our lete contest with Chins. Mr. Bernard is not only a close but—as we shall have occasion to show hereafter—a philosophical observer. He grasps a subject which many others have been able only to play with. In parts, his work partakes more of the character of history than most of its predecresors. In all that relates to the Nemicsic, especially, and to the Naval operations of the expedition, it is replace with the most lively and stirring interest.

"Those readers 'Mr. Bernard observes) who are alive to the important progress of steam navigation cannot fail to take a deep interest in the instory of the first true steamer that ever doubted the Cape of Good Hope. In the nativative of her carbons and preferated stayage will be found many nations of the plages she visited, and, in particular, of some of the Portuguese slave settlements on the East Coast of Airica, at Delagon May, at Mozamillements on the East Coast of Airica, at Delagon May, at Mozamillements on the East Coast of Airica, at Delagon May, at Mozamillements on the East Coast of Airica, at Delagon May, at Mozamillements on the East Coast of Airica, at Delagon May, at Mozamillements on the East Coast of Airica, at Delagon May, at Mozamillements of the Coast of Airica, at Delagon May, at Mozamillements of the Coast of Airica, at Delagon May, at Mozamillements of the Coast of Airica, at Delagon May, at Mozamillements of the Coast of Airica, at Delagon May, at Mozamillements of the Coast of Airica, at Delagon May, at Mozamillements of the Coast of Airica, at Delagon May, at Mozamillements of the Coast of Airica, at Delagon May, at Mozamillements of the Coast of Airica, at Mozamillements of the Coast of t

Mque, &c. The description given of the Comoro Islands will probably be quite new to most readers."

The Nemrate may be and to have "walked the waters like a thing of life" and wonder; and we marvel not that like a thing of life" and wonder; and we marvel not that the Chinese should have given her and her sister-steamers the appellation of demon ships.

"Not only did the interest awakened by the various subjects treated of growthy in rease, as the author proceeded in his attempt to describe the scene in which the Nonesis boro so distinguished a part, but the introduction of much collaters matter seemed to be called ba, in order to enable him fully to illustrate the current of passing events. Hence the narrative of the Aromer's radiually expanded itself into a complete history of the origin, progress, and toroinstion of all the recent interesting necurences in finns, including a full and accurate account of all the operations of the wat, and of the complicated dimentics from when it originated, as well as of the complicated dimentics from when it originated, as well as of the pacular features that marked its progress."

For "a minute and scientific description of the structure of the Nemesis," Mr. Bernard refers to the United Servine Lorend (Massagine), for May, 1840. With certain unavoid-

Her length over all was 184 feet, her breadth 29, her douth 11; her burden about 700 tons, her engines of 120 horse-power; her mean load draught of water only aix feet. "When the Nements left England she had on board about 60 men and Officers; but, during the operations in China, abe usually had about 92 men and Officers. Her daily consumption of fuel was about eleven tons.

"She had no puddle boats; but in other respects, she was well found in boats, while in China. She had two cutters, pinnace, sig, joily-boat, dingy, and always a large Chinace boat. A large platform was also built between the paddle-boxes, instead of the small bridge, which is usually constructed. This platform covered the whole space between the paddle-boxes, and was always occupied by the Officers, while the decta were drowded with the soldiers. There was also a 6-pounder brass gun upon a swivel carriage, mounted upon the bridge, which was very useful for trying the range. A rocket tube and a supply of rockets were always keyt in readiness upon the platform, besides ammunition for the brass gun, &c. In hot weather an awning was apread over it, and it was always a most occusient place for waithing and directing the operations of the steamer.

"Besides the two 32-pounter guns, the Nemesic carried four brass 6 pounders and one 8 inch lowitizer." * * * * * * makers was a matter of very little nument, and the mere chance of it did not deter het indefatigable Commander from pushing on it did not deter her indefaligable Commander from pushing on boldity, into every creek and corner where any service was likely to be rendered, or any discovery made. Moreover, she was at all times fit for service, even of the most trying kind, such as towing ables, or hauling off those which might be aground, conveying and landing troops, dec., &c. Being infinitely stronger than any wooden vessel of the same tennage, she required only the most simple and trifling repairs, when wooden steamers were constantly injured with less severe trials of their strength, and in continual need of repairs, which necessarily created delay, and rondered their afficiency, even with every exertion of their excellent Commanders, less perfectly to be depended on."

In her passage out, hywever, an awful fate seemed long impending over her and her orew. Shortly after her departure from Livermool, where she had been built, she departure from Livergool, where she had been built, she struck heavily on a reef of rocks, called the "Stones," at the cutrance of the Bay of St. Ives, in Cornwall, and sustained rather a serious injury. This was got over, and she lott Portsmouth, "all wall," on the 28th of March. 1840. After encountering much severe weather, and some aggidents of a minor character, she reached the Cape of Good Hope, and underwent the necessary repairs After a tremendous storm in the Mozambique Channel,

"An immense perpendicular crack was discovered on sides of the vessel, just before the after-paddle or sponson be extending almost entirely through the second from plate the tift, and also through a small portion of the upper one." Those had been broken assunder with great violence. tod no betavo

"In reality, he ship had begin to separate amidships, from one side to the other. There was every probability, too, that the crack, which at this time was nearly two feet and-a-half in length, would rapidly extend itself by the working of the ship, unless the weather moderated vary speedily."

()ne of the paddle-wheels, too, was broken. Gradually, the opening in the ship's sides began to extend itself in an alarming manner. Next, the furnace of the larboard boiler was found to be injured, and could scarcely be mend; and

"It became more and more uncertain whether the engines could be kept working, so as to gump the water out of the hold; to any nothing of urging the years! along."

The openings had at length extended downwards, more than three feet and a half, on both sides of the vessel. Delagon Bay, for which she had long been struggling hard was not less than 200 miles distant. Weather dreadfully stormy. "She heaved and strained most fearfully, the leaks increased, the openings spread, and yet she floate The danger was now imminent. The leaks increased : the apritures had "extended apwards completely to the deck, apertures had "extended upwards completely to the dock, and downwards far below the water-line;" as "The vessel heaved and rolled from side to side, the broken edges of the tron plates sometimes upsned to the extent of an inth, while their lateral motion, as the vessel worked, in the part that had hulged, was frequently not less than flee necker." The diagrerous state of the vessel was appalling, not only from the telat of her separating amidables, but from the chance of the bige-pumps becoming choked, or the fires being put out by the rush of water. The struggle was evidently to be une for life or reath; and who could then forget his God, his home, and all he loved on carth, or apped in heaven?"

Temporary expedients the most ingenious, and physical exertions the most incredible, were resorted to, and at last the gale slightly moderated—the heavy see had gradually inished -and at daylight, on the morning of of July, 1840, the Nemesis steamed into " English River, which runs into Delagos Bay. The split was ultimately

"Fxtended downwards full seven feet from the deck on either [each] side the vessel; and, as the distance from the deck to the water-line, with a moderate draught of water, is only from three feet four inches to three feet six inches, it must have extended under water for about the same distance as it did above. Aided by engravings in wood, the mode in which the permanent repairs were afterwards offerted is fully ex-plained; with "the method by which the recurrence of a similar accident has been provided against in vessels more recently constructed."

Passing over much intervening matter of interest, we reach Ceylon on the 5th of October; and there the mystery in which the destination of the Nemesis had hitherto been involved was cleared up, by the receipt of instructions for her to proceed to China, to be engaged in active operations in conjunction with Her Majesty's forces.

Mr. Bernard suggests the creation of a lighthouse on

Mr. Bernard suggests the creation of a lighthouse on the little rocky island of Pedro Branco, near Singapore.

"This would be a most advantageous site for the proposed monument to the memory of the distinguished Horsburgh, to whom too much honour cannot be paid for his inestimable works, so much relied on by all ravigators who frequent the Eastern seas. It would be difficult to find a more advantageous or appropriate position, for the best of all monuments to his fame, than this little, dangerous island of Pedro Branco, situated as it is in the very centre of some of his most valued researches; while the recent opening of the naw ports in China, and the possession of Hong. Rong, give an increased importance to subjects connected with the navigation of those seas. There is not a single vessel, either British or foreign, which traverses those regions, which is not indebted to Horsburgh for the instructions which render her voyage secure; and a lighthouse upon Pedro Branco would do no less service to navigators than it would honour to the memory of Horsburgh."

At Macao the greatest astonishment was excited

At Mucao the greatest astonishment was excited amongst the Portuguese as well as the Chinese residents by the appearance of the Nemeris,

In Mr. Barnard's review of the events which preceded the arrival of the Namesis in China, the opium question and several other points of difference are very effectively handled. There can hardly be a doubt but that the opium trade must eventually be legalised, and the drug be admitted on psyment of a duty. Notwithstanding that "the son of the Emperor himself died in his very palace, from the effects of the excessive use of opium' notwith standing that the prisons were filled with delinquents, and that "a great parade was made of the stern severity and that " a great parade was made of the "atern severty of the government, on the one hand, and of the obedient submission of the people, on the other,"

"The traffic liself was in reality as flourishing as ever, atthough perhaps it might have changed bands. Opium was more eagerly acught after than before; the price of it rose in proportion; and, precisely as had been predicted by the free trade or reform party in Pekin, it was found impossible to prevent its introduction into the country is the result themselves, even troduction into the country by the people themselves, even by the threat of death itself. Fishermen carried with them a single the threat of death itself. Fishermen carried with them a single ball, and made a large profit by its sale; women pretended to be droppical or "interesting" in their situation, and carried it in their clothes, the temptations and the profits were so large and treastible, that hundreds of modes were discovered for conveying it from place to place, in spite of the penalties which awaited detection. The beheading of a few men, and the imprisonment of others, did not deter the mass; the delicious intoxication of the precious drug proved far two attractive to be controlled by the horrors of death or torture."

The present Emporor of China, who ascended the throne in 1820, at a time of great disorder, and when a conspiracy had broken out in his father's palace, was horn on the work of China. conspiracy had broken out in his father's palace, was born on the 20th of September, 1782, and is, conse-quently, in his 62d year. It was about the years 1835

"That the question was so keemly debated, at court and elsewhere, whether uplum should be paranitted, under certain modified regulations, or whether it were possible to put an end to the traffic by force, and to driver the metion from its use by fear."

There seems to have been a reform, or free-trade,

There seems to have been a reform, or free-trade, party in the country. At the head of this party—"Was a Tarfar lady, belonging to the engineer's court, remarkable for hor abilities no less than her personal attractions, and poscessed of certain very strong points of character, which made her as much feared by some as the was bused by others. She was nown raised even to the throng tizelf, as the emperor's wife, but lived only a few years to enjoy her power. Her inducede soon came to be felt throughout the whole of that vast empire; it was the means of rewarding talent, and of detecting insulity. She seemed to possess, in a marked degree, that invutive discernment which sometimes bursts upsetful friends mad as if by inspiration. She was bleesed with it tune and energy of character in advance of her age and of her country. She had many grateful friends, but she had raised up for herself many bitter enemies; party feeling ran high, and became at length too powerful aven for an empress.

"Gradually her induced distintabed, the favour of the emperor declined, her opponent again got the upper hand, and at length she pined away under the effects of disappointment and perhaps injustice, and deed. But her influence, so long as it lasted, was unbounded, and was felt through every province."

The Empress's influence was greatest at the time just mentioned, mentioned.

"In her attempts to reform and to improve, she never ceased to be Chieses; indeed, she seems to have thought that to restore what was fallen to decay was the best hind of reform. She nought the removal of abuse, the particultum of public offices, and the improvement of the details of administration through-out the country. Her ladience became puremount; and those who could not be gained by her arguments are said to have been led by her fascinations."

The Emperor, in his public culogy of this remarkable

The Employer, in his public energy of this remarkance woman, after her death, "Declared that 'she was overflowing with kindness to all, lovely and winning.' She held control over the hearts of those about her, not by dint of authority, but by gentleness and forbearance. 'Her intercourse,' he added, 'lightened for me the burden of government, and the charm she spread around conclinated all hearts. And now I am alone and vad.'"

It was after the death of the Emperou's son, from the effects of opium, that an attempt was made to place the question upon moral grounds; and the influence of the Empreus, the "perfectibility of fillal obedience," as she was styled in the Pokin Gazette, having declined, "the reformation of morals became the subject of agitation, mite as much as the principles of trade had been before,

But it is time to introduce Commissioners Lin and Keshen, of whom Mr. Bernard offers the most churac-

Keshen, of whom Mr. Bernard offers the most churacteristic and graphic sketches we have yet met with. "It would be presumption to attempt to discuss the churacter of Liu, in the manner in which it deserves to be hundled, because he was a min of so extraordinary a atamp that, without having personally seen and watched him, it would be impossible to estimate him by the ordinary rules of incelligence. But his acts suffice to draw the outline of his character, quite as much as the latter would have enabled you to predict his acts. He secros to have been composed of good and had qualities in squal proportions, bat glways of a violent kind. He was a man who, in any other cobntry than China, would have been either distinguished as a Demagogue or branded as a Tyrant, precisely as excumatances chanced to lead him into a particular channel, he was reckless of consequences, so long as he could carry out his will without nontrol. He was violent, yet not selfship changeable, yet always elinging to his original views, severe, and even cruel and inexcusable, in reality, he is believed to have meant well for his engotry, and to have had the interests and the wishes of the Emperor, his Master, always a theart. He certainly believed that he could control both the people under his own government, and the foreigners who came lote contact with them, by force; and his very errors seem to have arisen from excess of zeal in the cause which he adopted. His talent was unquestionable."

In alluding, hereafter, to his successor, Kashen, I shall have "In alluding, hereafter, to his successor, Kashen, I shall have occasion to contrast them together; yet, however great may have been the difference of character between Lin and Keshen, it was quite insignificant in comparison to that between Lin and Captain Elliot. It seemed scarcely possible to bring two men together more thoroughly dissontiar in their character or mode of proceeding. In appeared to look down upon Fillot, not only as a foreigner, but as an individual; and the name of Englishman, as representing one of a Na'lon, was far more formidable to him than that of Elliot as representing a Government."

"Lin became intoxicated with his own success (for the time, at all events) in whatever he undertook, and expected all his orders to be executed with the same energy and famility with which he gave them utterance. It is said, moreover, that he procured a copy of a remarkable work called a 'Digest of Foreign Customs, Practices, Mannars.' &c. in which had deeds rather than good ones, and even the names of individual merchants, were brought forward, and that he studied this book with constant algasure.

"On the 19th of March, 1839, this redoubtable commissioner reached Canton, having travelled with extraordinary speed from Pekin, whither he had been called to receive his appointment at the hands of the emperor himself, who is said to have even shed tears as he parted with him.

"He lost not a moment, upon his arrival at Canton, in setting all the powerful energies of his mind to work, to devise means of accommissibility his goods.

all the powerful energies of his mind to work, to devise means of accomplishing his ends. He determined to undcavour to put a complete stop to the traffic in opium, both on the part of his own people and on that of foreigners; and his great aim was control, carb, and humble, the foreign community

y. From this time forth it became very evident that great and iplicated events must be looked for upon the political

Subsequently, however, Commissioner Lin-"the Robespierre, the Terrorist, the reckless despot, who represented a certain party in the empire"-

"Was declared, in his majesty's anger, to be of no use at all except to cause the "waves of confusion to rise;" that he was just like a "stupid fallow with his arms tied; and, as a finishing touch to the portrait, that he was in reality 'no better than a wooden image." Alsa for the mighty Lin' the dear friend at whose departure the emporor had before shed tears!"

Some further touches from this portrait, a few particulars relating to Keshen, and many other subjects must be defected for a second notice. The interest of this work—to the end of the first volume of which we have not yet reached—heightens as we advance.

The Mariner's New Duily Assistant: containing the Application of Plane and Spherical Trigonometry to Practical Navigation and Nautical Astronomy; with a Mathod of finding the Latitude by Meridian Atti-tudes; and a Journal of a Veyage from London towards Madras, &c. By James Griffin, Author of "The Chronometer's Companion," "A Complete Epitome of Practical Navigation and Nautical Autro-nomy," &c. Blachford and Imray.

In all scientific pursuits, simplification of theory is emisnently important. Of the truth of this position, Mr. nently important. Of the truth of this position, Mr. Griffin has, in the work before us, as well as in his "Bpitome of Practical Navigation," which we noticed last year, shown himself fully aware. Having had extensive experience as a teacher, he has here adopted the system of instruction which, he term us, he always found most successful in his academy. Commencing with such definitions and problems as he considered indispensable, he follows those definitions and problems by a simple course of plane trigonometry, which may regarded as constituting the outire groundwork theory of practical navigation. To this succeeds apherical trigonometry, which, in like manner, constitutes the groundwork and theory of nautical astronomy. This, to render it of more facile acquirement by the student, in carried on by Lord Napier's rule of tive circular parts. Next in order are exemplified the different system sailing, or, in other words, " the application of plane rigonometry to the solution of geometrical figures sup-posed to be formed by the track of a ship at sea." In the "Journal of a Voyage from London towards Madras," the application of plane navigation is shown. with the illustration of such occurrences as are usually met with at see. In the Appendix, numerous tables are given, with copious explanations of their use in practical ation, nautical astronomy, &c. To insure qualified success, this volume requires only to be known.

WE perfectly agree with the fair author of this "dramatic "that the historical event upon which it is founded sketch. "would form a magnificent theme for an acting play."
Why did she not undertake the task herself. Evidently, she is not without possession of the necessary power either as regards poetic feeling, or the conception and defineation of character. Many passages in "The Bridsl of Melcha" are ably and heautifully written, but clearly without the slightest view to stage representation. subject, it should be mentioned, is from the early history of Ireland, when Cuthullin (or Malachi) the king of that country, was, for a time, under the yoke of Thorgill, the conqueror. We really hope that Miss Boyle will not allow her telents to rest unexercised; "she has that within which passeth show."

Gaston de Poix. A Romance of the Sixteenth Century.

3 vols. Mortimer.

The author of this work is, we apprehend, a new aspirant for tame. It so, we say—" Goon, and prosper!" Excepting that every instorreal render must notic the catastrophe, Gaston de Forz, son of Louis XII., of France--the "Thunderbolt of Italy," the conqueror of that unhappy country, and who, after performing pradi-gies of valour, was killed at the bettle of Rasenna, in 1512, before he had completed his twenty-third yearwould be an excellent subject as a hero of romance career, however, though brilliant, was too brief to allow a full development of character. Of course, we are not to expect a rometice without love; but De Foix, as positiaved in the volumes before us, does not love as a soldier is accustomed to love-with all his heart and soul , his passion is deficient in aidour, generosity, devotion, self-denial. His tricks and contrivances to gain access to the damsel, with whose charms he has been auddenly anotten, are the tricks and contrivances of a boy, not of a man-not of a man and a soldier, whose soul is truth, whose polar star is honour. Setting aside the pre-engagement of her affections, the lady would have been quite justified in rejecting his suit.

With here and there a striking passage, the performance, as a whole, wants elevation and force; yet, with super-added scenes of battle, adventures by flood and field, and various incidents of miscellaneous character, the reader can hardly be otherwise than agreeably enterthe Princess Elizabetta Gonzaga, Lucretta Borgia, &c.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

THE NEW TWELVE GUN BRIGS, the Editor of the Navel and Military Genetic. With every care and anxiety on the part of their Sin, With every care and anxiety on the part of their talented projectors, and no small expenditure of public money, the material for testing the principles of construction forms of these fine vessels, tion illustrated in the varying forms of these fine vessels, has at length been furnished; and, while awalting the day of trial, the few following suggestions and remarks on the mode of arrangements of the personnel for the forthcoming contest, are submitted, through the medium of your valuable paper, for the candid o It may first be observed that the experiments intended

outhry of the public funds; and which would require that benceforth the British Navy should consist but of 12-gun brigs, in order to entitle it to that degree of attention which the coming trials so justly attract. But certain well qualified parties, devoting their time, talents, and experience to improvements in the forms of ships, have stood forth to offer for the public advantage the results of their studies; and, as the most satisfactory method of deciding between the merits of conflicting claims to the honour and advantages of thus conferring a boon on their country, those in power have determined on permitting their being thus, under public auspices, brought to the proof.

In the wise and equitable exercise of their authority, the Admiralty have therefore themselves assigned to the various competitors the limits of tomage, and fixed the proportions of equipment, stores, pravisions, &c., with which in order to constitute them efficient mensol-war. each vessel shall be found, bearing the particular form and relative dimensions of each to be so framed by her constructor as may beat clieft the further necessary qualifications of the greatest practicable speed and atability; the amount and stowage of ballastoleing also left in the same hands. This is wise; because thus, as far as practicable, is the public assured that for the privilege of permitting private fingers to enter its purse, it shall be pro-vided with all the requisites which, for ships of warsolutis, it is entitled to look; and equitable, because as far as practicable, every means are here taken to antisfy the triers and the tried that equal sircumatumes are provided for and thus provide for all against that disappointment and those heart-burnings which invariably attend on contents of this nature, where arrangements for fair play and no lavour are not so openly and obviously made.

The further question, then, which now seizes is, Can the same just and wice principles be established in the management of the personnel us we have thus some ap-plied to the moterial of these trials? Can the mind which is to act so important a part in the eventual results be ruled by the same laws as have been made to govern the weather? For all practical purposes it is conceived that it can ; and the mode of the application to thus, with much deference, rubinitted for consideration.

England may rejoure that for carrying out such experiments as those here contemplated, she will have no great difficulty in making a selection from among many Officers. who in energy, talent, and other qualifications, have approved themselves fully equal to the efficient command these reserts, under ofreumstances of such nicety and importance, yet, from the varying circumstances of differont metures and education, though all may be highly qualified, that all should be equally so, is not to be expe and the apperior experience in conducting trials of this nature, which would constitute an Officer possessing it a most desirable party to share in them, would, in the same ratio, place in unfavourable positions those vessels whose anders may not, in this respect, have been so fortunately endoned. In other similar cases, which will readily occur to the minds of most readers, where unavoidable inequalities threaten to destroy all confidence in a result, the process of taking a mean is found a safe and effective remedy; and with the desired view of bringing to bear on the various forthcoming trials, considered a, whole experiment, the aggregate talent and experience of all their several Commanders, directed as, no doubt, the general arrangements would be, so as to register and compare the various performances of sach vessel, It is suggested that for similar periods, and, as far as prac-ticable, under similar trials, each competing vessel should, in turn, enjoy the benefit and experience of each of their respective Commanders.

The chief objection to be urged against this arrangement seems to lie in the limited time which would be thus allowed to each Commander to benefit by the observations on each eraft-an objection in time, not in principle—to which it may be observed, that under able bands, with comparative trials in sailing, the chief object, a month or six weeks would surely afford ample time to elicit the good qualities of any ship, unless lying so deeply hid as to neutralise their goodness by the difficulty of producing them.

Again, the general discipline and efficiency of the crews could hardly be thus effected, if left in the hunds of able Officers of the lower grades, and composed of that style of seamen of which numbers are now in England, and who have mover fulled to delight in and chure in all the excitament and emulation of such trials; while the amount of inconvenience to be thus imposed on the Commanders themselves, must never be supposed to weigh against advantages of such importance as it is nerived would hereby he gained. These advantages would be to the public an assurance that strict justice had slone ruled the mode of trial, and at whatever vessel or vessels might be found are, in their consequences, not to be considered as limited to accure a testimony of superior merit from under so had would roll back the stone which is placed over the figure.

THE HOMBAY ARMY.
To the Editor of the Nanal and Military Gazette.
Sin,—1 see it reported in the Indian Papers that the Bombay Government has at length applied for an augmentation to its very limited and over-worked Army, The absolute necresity of such a measure is beyond doubt. It seems very probable, from the discontent shown in several corps of the other Presidencies, and the treatment pursued towards them, that Soinds will still be retained by the Army of the western Presidency. The accompanying list is, I believe, a correct statement of the present stations of the different regiments of the Bombay Army, and as they have been employed since 1839, it will enable you and your readers to judge what the efficiency of that Army is likely to be if the present system is continued.

It is stated that one corps has volunteered for service in Scinds; this, if true, speaks volumes for their spirit, when you consider the example that has been set them, and the fearful amount of death and suffering the hanks of the Indus have entailed.

SATURDAY, APRIL 13, 1844.

As the time approaches when the discussion is to take place relative to the honours due to the old War Officers, public interest seems to be gradually enlisted in the question, and more than usual curiosity is excited as to the result of Sir A. L. Hay's motion. The justice of the claim has never been for a moment doubted, therefore it is, that people are at a loss to guess what possible arguments can be brought forward, either to regist, or even purry a demand made in the strictest spirit of justice and right.

It was with a singular feeling of heart-felt satisfaction that we first learned the intention of Sir A. L. Hay to bring forward in Parliament the claims of the old War Officers to a decorative distinction in reward of their arduous services throughout the great and memorable series of victories won during the late war: now, after a dreary lapse of thankless years from the period of the triumphs gained, and hardships endured, which England should be ashamed to think of, and should blush deen orimeon to own.

It is manifest-and the only wonder is, it was not made manifest before-there is in the minds of people a change working, surely-alowly it may be, but not altogether allently, or without its out-spoken advocates, as the columns of the " Naval and Military (innette," week after week, may testify, with regard to this matter of Battle-Medals.

At first the question, like a sickly child, languished in its weakness, impotent; the nourishment of healthful sustenance was denied its helplesaness. Those who ought to have been first in the good work avoided the labour; who ought to have been foremost in the fight deserted the field; who would have profited by the victory, remained inactive in the rear. But, thanks to a newly and powerfully awakened intelligence, it would appear that another light has been thrown on the subject; that another phase has become apparent; and that even those who reflect least. begin to acknowledge the unsoundness of the old system is undeniable, and requires immediate and total reformation.

Why so lengthened a course of years was necessary to clear the vision and enlighten the unwilling comprehensions of persons to the advantages of an alteration in this matter, is difficult to understand; save upon the principle, in physical science, of the unpractised eye, which, when it tiest opens on some unaccustomed and startling object, is unable to messure its parts or scan its propertions, till the aight by degrees becomes habituated to the examination, and adapts itself to the novelty.

It has often struck us that, added to the repeated earnest recommendations and strong arguments which have appeared, almost without intermission, in our own columns, much of the present encouraging position of the Medal question may be attributed to the foreign descrations granted by the Queen of Spain and Shah Shoojah to those who fought in their causes, and that the fashion thus created led in some measure to the British distinctions lately awarded in the East; for surely it can scarcely be supposed that a same (not to say prudent) Government could so stuitify itself, as practically to inform its troops that victories won in an alien cause are more worthy of honourable notice, than achievements performed in maintenance of their country's glory.

Be this as it may, it is indisputable that a new idea has been quickened, a more healthy feeling engendered, and that, under this late-born influence, we may at length be permitted to hope, with some probability of our wishes being realised, that expediency and common justice will ultimately prevail, and that the Government which feels itself " strong " enough to grant half-a-crown a week to a married Ensign, in lieu of some judifferent coals and unsavoury fat-lights, will generously permit half-a-crown's worth of metal to be worn in honourable testimonial on the scarred breast of the old war-soldier, who marched his triumphant path through a series of unexampled and laborious years; maimed, without recompence; disfigured, without pity; having suffered many hardships; having struggled hero-like; belligerent in an hundred fights; victor in all !

But our sentiments on this subject have been too often before the public to require this repetition, and our good wishes for success may be easily imagined : indeed we cannot see how the motion can fail; therefore, taking for granted that something will be done, it now only remains . to point out in what shape we think a reward for past services might be best conferred at this, the eleventh hour.

We are decidedly of opinion with Lord Ellenborough on this point, that the plainer such a distinction of our soldiers is, the better; we would, therefore, suggest that the cannon taken at the various battles and sieges in the Peninsula, might be partially used for this purpose, which would_serve, like the meagre lead of Portis's caskets, to contrast with all the gewgaw ornaments that now glitter on the breasts of some of our warriors, which have been as often obtained by personal influence as by any real services in the field.

We annex one of several letters before us having referance to this subject.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sin,-All those who desire to see valour and merit receive a due and just acknowledgment, regard with high gratification Sir Andrew Leith Hay's notice of motion, and bail it as the first fruits of your able and unwearied advocacy of the long-neglected claims to distinction which the Peninsular veteraus so fully and honourably established. The hitherto unaccounted for neglect of those claims is an enigma, which it were vain and beside my purpose to attempt to solve; but it is the duty of every honest man to repair injustice at any period when opportunity may offer; and of every politic man, whose position enables him to exert f direct influence, to prove to the present and rising generations that the time will surely come (however delayed by circumstances) when noble deeds in our country's cause shall be acknowledged and rewarded with distinctions most grateful to a martial hosom.

The neculiar claims to which I have above alluded have en so repeatedly discussed in your columns, with great ability, that I will not venture to occupy more of your space on that head; but the present moment appears to me to be a peculiarly favourable one for drawing general attention (and particularly that of the gallant mover of the forthcoming motion) to the few Officers now remaining, who were engaged in one of this most sanguinary conflicts of the present age; a conflict in which the disparity in numbers was overwhelmingly in favour of the enemy, a conflict in which a vast park of heavy Artillery was triumphantly deptured,—one, too, by which great political advantages were secured, and, as a crowning grace, one which was directed and commanded in chief by Major-General Wellesley-his coup d'essai in the glorious art-the first opportunity afforded him on a grand and extended scale, of displaying to his country and the world a promise of the rare merit which his many glorious achievements have since so fully and amply confirmed. Need I say that I allude to the survivors (now not more, I believe, than thirty, in both Services) of the hard-fought battle of Assye, whose claims would, I submit, be gracefully and most appropriately associated in the motion of the gallant Member with those of the veterans of the illustrious Duke's subsequent campaigns? In reference to this engagement the following ages occur in the despatches of the noble Duke :-

* We attacked them immediately, and the troops advanced under a very bet fire from causen, the execution of which was terrible."

"I cannot write in too strong terms of the conduct of the troops; they advanced in the best order, and with the greatest steadiness, under a most destructive fire, against a body of Infantry far superior in numbers, who appeared determined to contend with them to the last, and who ware driven from their game only by the bayonet."

driven from their game only by the bayonet."

One Company of the Piquets, of 1 Officer and 50 rank and file, lost 1 Officer and 44 rank and file."

"The enemy's cannonade was terrible. We took either 98 or 101 pieces of cannon on the field of battle."

Such, Sir, on the most unquestionable authority, was the battle of Assye, gained by indomizable courage and perseverance, against vast odds, at a period when defeat would have been attended with incalculable injury to British interests. Can it, then, be doubted that the few who still survive would proudly bear a memento of so glorious a victory?

I shall consider myself highly fortunate if my humble effort secure attention in the right quarter, and enlist your powerful advocacy.—I am, &c. M. T.

MANY complaints have at various times been made to us, against the mode pursued in granting Greenwich Hospital Out-pensions to Officers of the Navy. We have always looked upon " Greenwich Out-pensions in the light of " Good Service Pensions;" that is, we have considered them allocated rewards to long and faithful servitude, and as compensations to Officers who, from misfortune, have lost promotion, or who have received wounds or hurts in the Service, for which no pensions have been granted them. If such were the claims acknowledged and weighed by the Admiralty, we should entirely colucide with their decisions. But when we observe the names of Officers (we allude to no names in particular), the dates of whose commissions are ten or fifteen years later than those of other candidates, selected to fill vacancies, without at the same time our being aware of any extraordinary merits to warrant such a leap, we are disposed to examine further. By pushing our inquiries, we find that family considerations-the necessitous condition of the candidates-almost invariably preponderate. Hence, there may be two candidates, one of whom, with twenty years' actual war servitude, has been passed over in general promotions, been wounded and not pensioned, but, unlucky wight, has not six small children; and the other may have only about a fifth part of the service, but, on the other hand, has been blessed with a numerous progeny. Of these candidates, the latter is pretty sure to carry the day!

Now, it should be remarked that every Naval Officer, supposing him to be a married man and without resources independent of his half-pay, must be in need of an addition to his small stipend, whether he has children or whether he has none. If he has carned by long and faithful services a pension—he ought to have it; and if the dispensers of the country's bounty, in their humanity, deem it necessary to attend also to the private claims of distressed Officers (and God forbid we should advocate a contrary disposition!), let them do it from a separate fund. But let not such considerations be seted upon at the expense of those who have served well, and to whom, we affirm, the Greenwich Out-pensions—like the Good Service Pensions granted to Admirals and Captains—are exclusively due.

The popularity of Lord Ellaboragh in India is the best possible refutation of the charges brought against him by the party-press of this country. Never yet has there been a great statesmen in India—Clive, Gornwallis, Wellesley, or the two Hastings—whose popularity was not unbounded in the empire they ruled, while detection at home followed their mediation as abadow.

Lord Ellenborough's polity is evident. It is peace—and war only for peace. He has ably followed out what he declared to be his intention, when undertaking the Government of India; and though, on his arrival at Mudras, he found himself involved in wars present, and his future rule threstened with wars to come, he has rescued, by his energy and fact, the name and fame of Britain from a temporary diagrace, and by victory on victory restored the prestignof our invincibility in arms. The Asmy of India needed and needs all the generous treatment and encouragement showed by Lord Ellenbarough. His Lordship seems to well understand the relations between the Governor. Caneral and the Armes of the empire he rules over. Litherto, we have seen him closely surrounded by difficulties, and even dangers, which he could only meet in arm; but the time, we hope, has now come, when the resources of India may be directed into channels of peace and that the close of his Lordship's Government may be blessed with the triumphs of peace and prosperity, as it commencement has been distinguished by the triumphs of war and victory.

Twe dislike of Officers to service in India is less es pressed than felt; but this feeling becomes very manifest when a rumour prises that a regiment is to proceed to India. The disgust to Indian norrice arises chiefly from the very long period that corps remain in the East, and the excessive difficulty experienced in obtaining leave. We may be treading on dusale ground to assert that very large sums are paid for exchanges to escape " Indian banishment for twenty years," as the service in that country is usually called. We have never been able to discover any great obstacle to the relief of our regiments after ton yours' foreign service, and why the corns on the continent of India should be kept out twenty years, and those in Ceyion, only a few miles distant from that continent, retained only ten years, is to us not merely unintalligible but unjust. If to this we add, that the corps in Ceylon have four out of their ten companies at home during their nominally ten years' foreign service, we have made out a hard case for the regiments serving in India, which leave only a skeleton or recruiting company in England. We, however, much prefer the system of sending out a whole regiment to India. We believe all good soldiers are enemies to the division of a corus into six service and four no-service companies.

IT appears that our opinions have given umbrage to the "Bombon Times ;" but we think that we should ill please our readers by entering into any discussion with the " Hembay Times " respecting the opinions we, from time to time, have expressed upon the treatment Sir Charles Napier, Sir Henry Pottinger, and Major-General W. Napier, have experienced from that journal. We have at all times written on disputed points with an anxious desire, at least, to express our opinions courteously while frankly, and in general we have received rejuinders penned in a similar spirit. For ourselves, then, we have but little to complain of in the tone adopted towards this Journal by the " Bombay Times;" but we see much to condemn' in the attempted refutation of Major-General William Napier's Letters which appeared in the " Sun" and in this Gazette.

However, as we once before observed, the Napiers are men who can fight their own battles and those of their country equally well—they need not our assistance—else our motto is. "In me convertite farros."

In our Gazette of the 30th uit., we commented in ra ther strong terms upon the rumoured promotion of Sir Joseph Douglas; since which we have had repeated letters and communications upon the subject, all of which leave our previously declared opinion untouched. We repeat, therefore, that whatever claims Sir Joseph Douglas posserves upon the consideration of the country, are cognisable by the Treasury only. In a copy of hir Joseph Douglas's petition to Parliament, with which we have been favoured, his claim to, in our view, an absurd amount of remuneration, rests upon the failure of Captain (Plenino) Elliot's fulfilment of an alleged verbal charter or contract, with which the Admiralty can have as little to do as his Celestial Mijesty. Still, had Sir Joseph Douglas, after acting in a manner generally allowed to have been spirited, and every way becoming a Naval Officer, elicited no notice whatever-had he not been restored to the fiat of Officers from which he had been removedhad no compensation been awarded—we should have felt it a duty to have advocated his cause. But when we know that one of the highest personal honours which could have been bestowed by a Sovereign upon a gentleman in his station of life was conferred upon him-when this distinction was accompanied by a gratalty of 2000/

(to say nothing of the Henourable East India Company's reward)—and furthermore, when we know that upon solicitation his former place on the list of Masters was restored to him—we arrive at the conclusion, not only that Sir Jeseph Douglas has no claim, except in a mercantile point of view, but that his conduct, spirited and putriotic though we admit it to have been, has been liberally compensated.

The reported change in the Summer Clothing of the Infantry seems to have had no foundation, except in the general desire to discontinue the use of lines trawsers in this climate. Already the Cavalry and Artillery have adopted cloth, and we have never heard any complaints from them, that they found the cloth trawsers too warm; and it is to be observed that no men have harder work to perform than the Artillery. We hope yot to see cloth worm at the year by the Infantry.

While on the subject of clothing we would take this opportunity of pointing out en arrangement for the issue of the cloth trowsers, which would be a great convenience to the Service. We would suggest that the cloth trowsers should be issued on the lat of October, instead of on the lat of April, from the Colonel's atore. At present the Winter cloth trowsers are carried about all the Summer before they are worn-for in few, very few regiments, are they taken into wear on the lat of April; and in some corps are not fitted till May, or even June. We would gladly see the Summer cloth trowsers issued on lat of April, and the Winter cloth trowsers (such as now worn,) on 1st October. The expense of the second pair of cloth trowers would be He .-- which is the sum paid for the two pair of lines trowsers now worn during summer. We would have both the Summer and Winter cloth trowners of the same colour, and, even if of the self-same cloth, we see no strong objection. There are not twenty days in the year, on which the soldier would find cloth trowners to be too warm for comfort-and no one day on which they would be too warm for health. We ask the Medical Officers of the Army to exert their influence to do away with the evil of wearing damp linen trowsers; for damp they must generally be in this climate, where the soldier possesses only two pair, and facilities for drying in-doors are desied-usy, very properly probibited in harrack-roums.

Wirit reference to the remarks in our last Gazette, respecting the retiring allowance to Regimental Paymenters, wherein we stated that it was our conviction that the present Secretary-at-War only required to be made equainted with any just claim on behalf of the old Veterans who at present hold that responsible situation, to have it at once granted; and we observed, that from personal knowledge, we know of their being perfeetly satisfied with the present system of full-pay, and that they only required to be placed on a par with all their other old brother Officers, in being permitted toretire after a full pay service of thirty-five years, (twentyfive of which as Paymester), and then only by two-yearly. Now, when we said only two per annum, we meant that after providing for all the l'aymasters who had already completed this long service, then only two a-year to be allowed in their proper turn to ratire hernafter. This is but fair; for although there are not a dozen Paymenters in the whole Service who at present would come under the rule, yet to keep some of them still fagging on, perhave for six or more years, would be equal to negativing their claims altogether. For what Insurance Office would give six years' purchase for a life of sixty ?--- already nearly worm out, from being exposed to such a length of service in foreign chimates.

We also most respectfully, but strongly recommend to the notice of the Secretary-at-War, the necessity of permitting Captan on half-pay to hold the situation of Paymaster, without repaying the difference they may have received on going to half-pay. This would be the means of filling up all vacancies hereafter by Coptains instead of-Subalterns, which would be an immense saving to the public; indeed, if all Paymasters were half-pay Captains, the yearly sum of upwards of 17,000% (being the actual half-pay which each Paymaster, being a Captain, is entitled to at seven shillings par diem,) would be saved to the

The general feeling in China appears to be, that the Chinese are sincerely intent on fulfilling their engagements with the British nation; yet one of our correspondents writes, that they are evidently preparing for the contingency of war. In the direction of Whampon platoon and file firing may be heard every morning, which not only corroborates the report of large hodies of troops being at daily exercise, but likewise indicates that his Colestial Majesty is becoming sensible of the advantages of European discipline. We have no right to quarrel with any people for improving their powers of defence; and, in the case of the Chinese, we are rather inclined to bail the circumstance as a happy presage-a prognostic, in abort, of further advancement in civilization, by the adoption of the arts and sciences of Europe. When once the rubicon of prejudice be crossed, there is no limiting the murch of improvement. Small arms of every description obtain a roady sale, a marked preference being given to those on the percussion principle. Large quantities of caps are of course sold in consequence.

Several gentlemen from Hong-Kong have at different times crossed over to the Kouloone side of the harbour, and penetrated many miles into the interior. The most marked respect, mingled in some measure with surprise, has in every lustance been evinced by the inhabitants, who invariably bring out chairs and offer them tea.

It is gratifying to find that the Letters and Despatches of the immortal Nelson are at length about to be collected and published, in a form corresponding with Colonel Gurwood's celebrated work "The Wellington Despatches." The task has been undertaken by a gentleman, Sir Harris Nicolas, whose previous publications are strong evidence of his fitness; indeed, we should have some difficulty in fixing upon one better calculated, from talents and industry, to accomplish the object; and we therefore appeal to all who are in possession of letters and other documents to come forward and assist Sir Harris in the completion of a work of such vast national importance.

THE Infantry of the Line of the British Army has always been organised in separate battalions: the system of regiments composed of more than one battalion, as practised by the Continental powers, is entirely unknown among us. We had during the war "second battalions" of regiments, but they were in fact separate corps, bearing the same number certainly and wearing the same uniform, but still essentially separate corps. We have now in the Army, the lat Regiment, the 60th, and the Rifle Brigade, having each two battalions, but which battalions are severally as separate regiments as if bearing different numbers, and if meeting in the same garrison, or in the Same brigade in the field, would continue to be as independeut and separate us any other corps so drawn together.

This system of single battalions is that in which our Officers have been trained; and although we use the word regiment in speaking of one corps, we always mean battalion. In the regulations for the drill of the Army no allusion is made in any part to the formation of a regiment composed of more than one battalion. The system is an expensive one, for each battalion has the staff of a regiment; but it is considered suited to our purposes, on account of the very small numbers in which the troops are dispersed through our possessions. The single battalion system has, however, the disadvantage of narrowing the professional acquirements of the Officers, to whom the exercise of more than one battalion in conjunction, becomes a rare occurrence instead of being a matter of every day's experience; whence a great esperiority of foreign troops over the liritish in their facility of moving in great masses; and on the part of their Officers in a greater familiarity with brigade manouvres. Neither do regulations assign to the Commanding Officer of a regulation and the commanding Officer of a regulation as the commanding Officer of a regulation and the commanding Officer of a regul for even in our largest parrisons whole seasons are allowed to pass over without exercising or even forming the battalions in brigade. We have abundance of drill by single battalions, where Commanding Officers acquire great reputation for brillancy of execution and smartuess, slipping from one uniatelligible manosuves by some sleight-of-hand trick but another, to the great wonderment and admiration of the bystanders, but the utility or application of which to the real purposes of war it would sele themselves or any one else to explain. The fact perhaps, are so little familiar with the management of bodies of troops beyond the single battalion, that they have no desire to exhibit their lack of advoitness in public.

The late arrangement of augmenting the Army by increasing some regiments to twelve companies, is an to the Continental system of battalians. unpopular among our Officers, most probably because they find in it something new, something at variance with system of organisation in which they have been trained. It is strange that in making this radical change in the manipulation of the regiments selected for the experiment, some steps were not taken to instruct the Commanding Officers of the regiment and battalions in the details of the new arrangement; it would have saved much ill-temper, wrangling, and miannderstanding, which in some instances have been exhibited, all arising from ignorance of the new signification given to the word regiment. The Commander of a battalion and the Commander of a regiment, have always been the same thing in our Service, and, with that fixed idea, the moment an Officer found himself placed in command of a battalion, he considered himself possessed of all the independence of action of the Commander of a regiment. In like manner the Commander of a regiment could not rise from the command of a battalion : he saw not the new and higher functions of his office nuder the new arrangement; he could not understand how there could be any intervening authority between him and the Captains of his companies, or the Adjutant of his battalion. This is no fancy sketch: the Lieutenant-Colonel of ous of those regiments of two battalions said, that "two angels from heaven could not command a regiment and a battalion under the new system Why did this Officer say without quarreling." Because be had been trained under the single battalion system, and had not been instructed sufficiently in the changes necessarily following upon the new arrangement.

The principal reason assigned for forming such battalions was economy, but that does not appear to have been carried so far as it might have been, without increasing materially the expense; if these battalions are to remain as a permanent arrangement, their efficiency may be in-

The present arrangement for one of these regiments of two battalions is, that the whole permanent staff of the regiment, except one Major and one Assistant-Surgeon, remains attached to the first battalion. The staff of the second battalion is then completed to the same number as that of the first battalion, by Officers taken from the companies, viz., one Acting Paymaster, one Acting Quarter-master, and one Acting Adjutant. The twelve Subaltern Officers of the battalion are thus reduced to nine. same manner the Staff-Seriesats are taken from the companies, but on the other hand the companies live each, that ought to be throughout the Service, five Serjeants. The Lieutenant-Colonel, who commands the regiment, is also required to attend, as its immediate chief, to the details of the first battalion. The senior Major commands the second battalion, but under the general superintendcuce of the Lieutenant-Colonel.

It appears to us that some unnecessary expense and complication exist in this double staff, and we, therefore, trust that a sketch of an improved system may be put forward, without presumption, among the pro-jects of the day. One Paymaster with one clerk can perform the daties of that department, for ten companies; there can be no reason why the same Officer, with two clerks, should not as easily perform the daty for twelve. In like manner, the Quartermaster who, with the assistance of one Serjeant, can perform the duties of his office for ten companies, may, with the additional aid of a second Seri, perform those duties for twelve companies.

We will now proceed to detail the system of organisation and management of a so-formed regiment of two battalions. The Lieutenant-Colonel commands the whole regiment; he issues regimental orders, receives the reports of his battation Commanders, orders and approved regimental Courts-Martial, appoints all Non-commi Officers, and have the hours of parades and drills, directing what they shall be and how they shall be conducted. delegates to his Majors, who command the battalions, the form contained in the guard-reports should be made to him, signed by the Commanders of battalions. All cases requiring more serious consideration should be referred to him, as with him rests the ordering a Regimental Court-Martial, or the application for trial before a superior The Commanders of battalions should submit to him daily the reports of Orderly Officers of their battalions. The Surgeon of the regiment, the Paymaster, and the Quartermaster, take their orders direct from the Lieutenant-Colonel. It is clear be must have a room or office for the transaction of business. His hour of business will necessarily be somewhat later than that of the battalion Orderly-rooms.

The general details of quarters should be conducted under the orders of the Lieutenant-Colone!, in the same manner as is now done in regiments of but one battalion; that is, he will fix the hours of the men's meals, the arrangement of the barrack-rooms, the times of visiting, &c. In all such matters the Commanders of battalions should be merely executive, not directing Officers, as in other regiments are the Majors of wings. To assist the Commanding Officer, if the Government will not afford an Officer with the rank of Cautain, as Adjutant-Major of the regiment, he can order a Regimental Orderly Captain to attend daily at his office during the hours of business. A permanent clerk will be required in the office of the The following books would be kept Lieutenant-Colonel. In the Lieutenant Colonel's office, viz. :—1, General Order-book; 2, Regimental Order-book; 3, Record of Officers' services; 4, Letter-book; 5, Return-book; 6, Registry of Ferlaughs; 7, Description of descriers; 8, Court-Martial-book; 9, History of services, or Regimental Record-book ; 10, Register of marriages and baptisms. As a general principle, no battalion returns pass the office of the Lieutenant-Colonel; they serve there as the material from which the general regimental returns are drawn up.

The battalions are communded by Majors, each of whom commands his own battalion, as the Captains command their companies, being responsible for them to the Lieut-Col., who is always, as Commanding Officer of the regiment, to be referred to in every matter of importance. which may have a general regimental effect. vidual of a battalion has any communication with the Lieut.-Col., except through the medium of his battalion Chief, who is the Captain's Commanding Officer, from whom he receives his orders, and to whom he makes his reports. Each battelion must have its orderly room or office. There must be an Adjutant for each battalion; for the second battalion an extra Subaltara Officer should be borne on the strength; the companies have no mure Officers than are required, and cannot afford a Subaltern for this duty. The following books must be kept in the orderly-room of each battaliun, viz. 1, Order-book; 2, Register of Soldiers' Services ; 3, Letter-book ; 4, Return book; 5, Battalion Defaulter-book. The Lieut.-Col. should be furnished daily with a morning state of each The muster-rolls of battalions, prepared by battalion. their Adjutants respectively reparately, would be signed by the Commanders of battalions, and verified by the sigtures of the Paymester and the Lieut.-Col., as Muster

The Paymaster having two clerks, one for each battailon, would propare separate pay-lists. These documents, as far inclusive as the "Commanding Officer's and Adjutant's Certificate," will be distinct. That certificate should be signed by the Mojors commanding battaltons and their Adjutants, and be countersigned by the Lieut.-Col. as commanding the regiment. The next title in the Pay-list, the " Effective State of the Regiment," remain as at present, and be filled up for the whole, in-cluding both battalions as well as all the remaining parts of the Pay-list, including the " General State of the Public accounts with the Paymaster." The Paymaster's declaration would be witnessed by the lacut,-Col., and if a second Officer be required as a witness, by the Orderly Captain assisting in the Lieut. Col.'s office for the day. The blank forms of Partitists sout from the War-Office for the use of the the day battailon, need not commanding Officer's and Adjutant's Certificate." These remarks enter sufficiently into detail to show the general principle shome few further modifications, doubtless, weald suggest themselves.

The hospital would be general for the regiment, but the Surreon would be dispute his arrangements as to admit.

The hospital would be general for the regiment, but the Surgeon would be dispose his arrangements as to admit, in the event of a battalion being detached, of an efficient hospital establishment accompanying it. The surgeon has under him two mon-commissioned () fficers, the hospital Serjeant of the first battalion, and the hospital Corporal of the second. While the hospital is considered as one, and for the whole regident, entirely under the Sur-geon, sided by his assistants, and his hospital Serjeant, geon, sided by his assistants, and his hospital Serjeant, assisted by the Corporal and Orderlies, yet the facility of sub-division should ever be held in view; but while the bettalions are united, the accounts of the hospital are those of the regiment, and at its duties conducted as if the twelve companies all belonged to one battalion.

The Quartermaster also takes his orders from the Lient.-Cel. His is assisted by two Serjeants, to each of whom is assigned the particular details of a hattalion. He will at all times have in view the possibility of the separation of the battalions, and have his stores so arseparation of the battalions, and have h ranged that in the event of a battalion being detached, its requisite stores should be ready to accompany it. In the ration returns no notice is taken of the distinct battalions more than in the present forms are the distinction of companies. In his subdivision of rations he, of course, classes by battaltons, but not in his accounts with the Government. The Commanders of battalions can have no duty with the Quartermaster's department but what can be done through the Commanding Officer of the regiment, as the Captuins of companies must at all times conduct their matters about quarters and clothing.

We must postpone till next week the conclusion of this subject.

The Lord Chamberlain has lessed invitations to a distinguished party to a full dress dinner on the 25th inst , celebration of Her Majery's Birthday .- The Queen will give a series of brilliant State balls at Buckingham Palace during the season.

H.M.'s packet Princess Alice arrived in Dover Roads on Thursday 11th inst., at 2 15 p.m., from Ostend, having Prince Albert and suite on board. Windsor Theatrivals.-The amateur performances of the Officers in garrison at Windsor took place last night. The pit, as on a former similar occasion, was converted into stalls, which, with the boxes, was crowded with a most fashioushie sudience. The first piece was the "Wreck Ashore:" after which, "The Follies of a Night;" concluding with the buriesque opera of "Bombustes Purioso," Everything west off admirably; and the performances on the whole were such as would have done honour to a first-rate company of professionals.

The Guernsey Ster, of Thursday, publishes (49., exaggerates) certain particulate of a misunderstanding which has recently grisen between the Licut.-Giv., Maj.-Gen. Napier, and Sir Wm. Collings, one of the magistrates of the island. It appears that the Gazette de Guernsey of the 16th ult., in reporting some observations which it alleged had been used by Sir W. Collings, made that magistrate say that his Excellency was in the habit of making to the Sucretary of State en parte statements "without foundation." The Lieus.-Governor, conceiving that this expression, " without foundation," charged him with falsehood applied to Sir W. Collings to state whether he had uttered it. The latter assured the Lieut. Governor that he had not made use of the expression, and promised to have the mistake in the report rectified. For this purpose he called at the nawspaper-office, and obtained a promise that a more correct version of his observations, in which the offensive expression was omitted, should appear. From some cause, however, the correction did not make its appearance at the appointed time, and Sir W. Collings, who stated he was ignorant of the cause of its non-appearance, was then required, on the part of the Lieut. Governor, to sign a paper, the tenor of which, though not publicly known, was supposed to be a disavowal of the offensive expression. This took place on the 50th ult., but Sir W. Collings refused to sign the paper, on the ground that he had never used the expression. In the course of the evening Sir W. Collings received a latter from the Lieut-Governor, to the effect that Sir William having refued to disavow the felse and offensive words which had been published in the Gazette, notwithstanding his promise to do so, had thereby violated his word as gentleman, and must be considered to have made use of the expressions referred to; that in uttering the foul charge which the words conveyed, Sir W. Cullings had abused his situation as magistrate to calumniate Her Majesty's representative; that, filling the situation which the Lieut-Governor did, it was impossible for him to demand that satisfaction for the false and infamous charge brought against him which, had he been differently circumatanced, he should immediately have done; that, as it was, he should report the circumstances to the Secre-tary of State, who would compel Sir William to give the reparation he refessed; and that, in the mean time, he must rest under the dishonour of having made a false charge, and forfeited his word as a gentleman. Sir W. Collings, considering that this extraordinary letter was an attack on him in his magisterful especity, communicated the same the next day to the dislift; and, in consequence, a special meeting of the Royal Court was aummoned for the following day (Monday). In the mean time it was intimated that the Lieut. Governor did not wish to carry the matter further, and, therefore, before sending his report to the Secretary of State, desired to know whether Sir William would sign a declaration that he had whether sir withink would see a mount fouldment." The Court, however, was of opinion that the letter of the Liqut.-Governor to Sir W. Collings was an aggression on the whole body of magistrates and on the administration of justice, and that if the Lieut. Governor wished for an or justice, that that the most commence by withdrawing his letter to Sir W. Collings. As nothing further was heard from the Licut.-Governor, Sir W. Collings transmitted his account of the affair to the Home Secretary on 2nd inst, and thus the matter rests at present.—Times.

Her Majesty's Theatre.—The Opera re-opened on Tuesday night in its full magnificence, the whole constellation of "stars" appearing before the public. Bellint's "Puritani" was performed, and its succession of charming melodies deem forth that constant, unflagging applause which has ever attended its perfurmance since the tirst night of its production. Cirisi has returned to as in magnificent voice; her tones were full, rich, and mellow, her execution delicate to the most exquisite degree, and true to the very ideal of perfection. Lablache brought with him his well-known volume of voice, and and with all his ancient mejesty. The veterans of the operatic corps were loudly halled on their appearance, and were summoned before the curtain after its descent.

It was, in fact, a return of the old days of Hor Majesty's Theatre.

Brury-Lane .- The lessee, relying with just confidence on the attraction of M. Duprez, in Rosaint's fine opera of "Gogliaume Tell," did not deem it necessary to furnish any novelty for Easter Monday. The event proved the correctness of his spiculation. The house was extremely well attended.

Haymarket.—On Easter Monday "a new, original, occasional, and local extravaganea" was produced, entitled, "The Drama at Home, or an Evening with Puff." The object is to expose the fallen state of the drama, and the foreign and beterogeneous entertainments produced at other theatres, in contrast to the performant at the Haymarket Theatre, wherein, after being driven from Drury lane and Covent-garden, the genius of the drama finds a home. The piece afforded considerable amusement, particularly the dislogue in the earlier scenes, which was full of happy points.

Luceum .- Again has this theatre onened, and under which, if not much distinguished for novely, is nearly put together and smartly written, and it fully merited the applause which was bestowed on it at the fell of the our-tuin. The author, we believe, is Mr. George Dance. It, was followed by an excellent farce called "The Post of Honour.' Then came the Esater-piece, pur exceller—the fairy extraveganza of the " Forty Thieves," four Honogr." on the dramatic version of the Arabian tale, with its good spirits and its terrible Orcobrand, personages unknown in the originst. dellay's ..... This highly popular and successful place of public entertsimment was re-upaned on Easter Monday for the second season under the management of its apirited proprietor, Mr. Batty. The curtain rose at seven o'clock, and the performances commenced with a new grand national historical spectagle, entitled "The Invasion of England by William the Conqueror, or the Battle of Hastings." The piece is admirably constructed with of Hastings." The piece is admirably constructed with a view to the introduction of the stud of horses, the gorgroup processions, the mimic scenes of bloodshed, and the magnificent tubleaux, for all of which the house has no long and so deservedly been colebrated. Of the tableans it is impossible to speak to terms of ton high praise. We must especially notice "The Landing of William the Conqueror," "The Death of Harold," and "The Coro-Conqueror," "The Death of Harold," and "The Coronation of William I." The wonderful evolutions of M. Plage, the French rope-dancer, followed, and drew down long and well-deserved plaudits. " The Cirque Olympique, or Arens of Equitation," was presided over by pique, or Arene of Equication, was prestine over by the "hever-dying Widdiromb," who met a warm gracting, and introduced two new caudidates for fame in deeds of during horsemanship and skill, in the persons of Signor Germani, described as the Italian juggler rider, and M. Adelphi .- Mr. Anderson, the "Great Wisard of the North," commenced his operations on Easter Monday. The tricks which he exhibited surpassed anything of the kind performed by any other artist of his cless. He was received with foud and deserved applicase. In addition to the conjurations and magic of the Wigard, the entertainments of the evening were diversified by the exertions of Mr. M. Raymond, who same some very good Irish songs, and related a number of humorous anecdotes connected with Iriob manners and Irish melodies. The whole is precisely such an entertainment as those who went the relexation of a few hours should patronise, and of its kind the best thing extant.

East Endia Antelligence.

On Wednesday a ballot was taken at the East India House, for the election of six Directors in the room Maj.-Cen. Sir James Law Luchington, G.C.B., G. Lyali, Esq., M.P., E. Macnaghten, Esq., J. P. Muspratt, Esq., M. T. Smith, Esq., and W. Wigram, Esq., who go out by rotation. At six o'clock the glasses were closed and delivered to the acrutineers, who reported that the election had fallen on Sir R. Campbell, Bart., J. W. Hogg, Esq., M.P., the Hon. H. Lindsand, Maj.-Gen. A. Robertson, Lieut.-Col. W. II. Sykes, and Sir H. Willock, K.L.S. A Court of Directors was afterwards held, when the thanks of the Court were voted unanimously to J. Cotton, Esq., deputy-chairman, and J. Shepherd, Esq., deputy-chairman, for their great application and attention to the affairs of the East India Company during the past year. On Thursday the new directors took the oath and their seats. Mr. John Shepherd was chosen chairman, and Sir Henry Willock, K.L.S., deputy-chairman, for the year ensuing.

47th and 20th Madras NA .- The following extract from a letter received by the last Overland Mail, from an Indian Officer, contains observations on the late mutiny in those regiments, which will be read with

"You probably will see by the Hombay Papers that the 47th Madras M.I. have not been behaving by the most exemplary manner on being ordered to Scinde, and afterwards countermanded to serve within the Bombay Presidency. The business is in itself bad coough, but the papers, for their own purposes, have endeavoured to exaggerate the evil, and given it a colouring of their own. The breath of sedition in an Army is poison, and should not be allowed to respire for a moment; no compromise can be admitted with ducipline, and the heavier the blow falls at the instant, no much the lighter will it be felt in the end; but if the steed, sulet in its nature, be first goaded with the apar and them excited by alternate shackening and tightening of the rein, will it is nown physical power, what should we say of the windom of that man who, when he is the instant, so much the lighter will it be felt in the end, but it the steed, sulet in its nature, be first goaded with the apur and then exceted by alternate alsokening and tightening of the rein, until he is made to feet the strength of his own physical power, what should we say of the wholen of their and who, where he is careering to break lorse, would cut the curb chain which restrains him, in the vain hope that the animal would, of its own accord, become quiet and submissive? And still practiculty that has been, very nearly, the conduct of Government towards the native Army, the crit consequences of which each day serves more and more to develope, thus realising the predictions of the whole Army upon the great primary false step, viz. the abolition of corporal punishment without establishing in the first instance any, and, subsequently, an issenficient substitute for it. This we, owe to Lord W. Hentick, but otnors have followed in his wake, and last year saw the name of an order, on the Madras side, depriving altagether a regimental tommanding Officer of the power of continuing the award of any Court-Martal on a private. On the subject of pay I should tell you, that, originaling in the peculiarity of our empire, and the mode in which it has from time to time been increased, what in England would be termed the pay of the Army, is divided under the various heads of pay proper, tentage, batta, foc, the last quands being an allowance to the troups when marching and in the field, as well as at stations, which, being only temporarity occupied, are looked those quantities, being only temporarity occupied, are looked those year, and occasionally granted in cases of emergency. Government wisholy, think—wishing to remove the distinction between the Presidencies, and probably with a view eventually to solite the Armios into one, has been for some time riging to generalise, or rather assimilate, the pay of the whole; but instead of doing an oa fixed principle opesily, and with a determination of carrying out the meas ture of M. Shurrer's fort, has published in the indian papers the following interesting document:

"It must be remembered that the rebellion broke out on Nov. 2, and it was in the night of Nov. 4 that the conference of Officers took place at the General's house, when the propriety of finediately capturing M. Shurrer's fort was discussed. The principal speakers, for and against, were Sir W. Macmaghten, Captains Hoyd, Lawrence, Grant, and Bellew, but several other Officers were spresent. Of Gen. Elphustone's talents as an Officer, I than knew nothing. His apparent lack of enterprise, during the first day, had certainly excited general surprise; but I considered that neithur my station nor standing in the Service entitled me to obtrude my thoughts upon him masked. I accordagely sat a silent listener during the early part of the debate, until the General auddenly accosted me, and legging me into his private room, demanded my opinion as to "back he ought to do. I then said that, from all I had heard urged by the Envoy and Captain Boyd, I could not help concurring with them as to the expedence of ansaulting the fort without delay. He then complained of what he was pleased to term Captain Boyd inpertuolity, which, he said, annoyed without convincing him (Captain Boyd and, in his eagerman to carry his point, spoken in rather a loud tone of voice and high temperament, and his language, though not, perhaps classically select, yet extrainly was respectife), and his object in calling me aside was that we might discuss the matter calmy and dispassionately. He then reminded me of the severe loss asstained that very day in the saily under Capt. Swayne, H.M.'s 44th, and said he foared a repetition of the same thing on the present occasion, without any proportionate benefit being derived, and that he could not hear to contemplate such a rightful sacrifice of life. I replied, that to a case of such desperate emergency as the present, coldiers must be prepared to ascrifice their lives, and I concrived that auco secondary sounderstons should not be weighed in the balance against a measure involving the safety and honour of the whole force. He walked about the room for averal minutes in great agitation, urging again and again the same objections, and receiving the name reply; it length be seen to the own and called in Maj. Thain and Capt. Grant. The General had an unfortunate habit of dving from one subject to another, its being impossible to keep his attention the dto an argument for any length of time. Observing this propensity, and soing the moessity of bringing him to a speedy declain, I proposed that he should shide by the opinion of Leistenaut Surt, Garrison Engineer. He eagely Jumped at the jumped the down and called in Banker has

Meanwhile, practious time sped at a fearful rate, and what with running hither and thither all night long. I was thoroughly faggred, and, but for the necessity for continued exertion, could have fallon asleep on my legs.

"The troops turned out but slowly, and in driblets, and to my horror it was broad daylight ere they were collected at the western gate in readiness to move out. The rost is already known. The delay had been falst to the garrison of the Commissariat tort, who, hard pressed by the enemy, and despairing of relief, evacuated their post at dawn of day, and marched into cantonments just as we were on the very point of moving to their assistance.

"The public are now in possession of all that I can tell them on this sad subject. I trust I have relieved Lieut. Start from the unmeritud odium of having given thuid advice, thaugh I regret that in so doing I could not avoid details illustrative of the weak points of Gen. Elphastone's character. But it is of no time to mince matters now. His incapacity, from the decay of mental and bouly powers, has become a matter of history. To attempt, therefore, to patch up his reputation at the expense of his juniarys would be as unwise as it would be wicked. Lady Sale ascens to have thought he was twayed by the had advice of some of his Maiff Omers. It was very natural in her to imagine so, because he really seemed to have so opinion of his own, and was in the habit of worming one out of every person that came near him; but in this particular case, as well as in meany others, I am perfectly convinced that ties Elphinstone's own exceeding reluctance to inscarif the lives of his Officers and onus of his hamentable hesitation. This it was that made him eagerly listen to what seemed even the ghost of an echo to his own ideas, making it appear that such straws preponderated in the balance, when, in reality, he merely when the fremest linguished of all excuese to houg back from an enterprise, the importance of which he had neither the clearness to comprehend, nor the firm

COURT-MARTIAL ON ASSIST.-BURG. D. MACFABLANE. Head Quarters, Bombey, Jan. 23, 1844.—At an Europeán General Court-Bartiel, assembled at Belgaum, on Taseday, 18th Dec., 1963, and of which Major James Creagh, of H.M.'s 88th Rec. of Foot, is President, Assist.Rarg. Donald Macfariane, M.D., of 16th Reg. Madras N.I., was tried on the following charges, viz.: First charge—I charge Assist.Rarg. Donald Macfariane M.D., 16th Madras N.I., of conduct unbaseoming the character of an Officer and a gentlemen, and prejudicial to groad order and Military discipline, in the following instances:—First, for having at Beigaum, nome time between let and 22d Nov., 1843, asserted to Major Ciement Clements, and to Capt. G. Munro Arther, 28th M.I., that the Officers of the 28th N.I. had formed a party, or combined or compired, or words to the same effect, to prevent any unmarried Medical Officer Joining the 20th N.I.; thus casting duhonour upon the Officers of the 38th N.I. Second, for having at the same place, at the Mass-house of 38th N.I., on 23d Nov., 1843, publicly reterated the same injurious and false assertion, as stated in the first instance of the first charge, after the Assist.-Surg. Donald Macfariahe, M.D., had been previously assured by the said Maj. Clement Clement, and Capt. G. M. Arthur, that the assertion was unfounded and false; thus evincing a determination to injure the honour and character of the Officers of the 28th N.I., and in the presence of Officer of H.M.'s 86th Poot, and of the 28th N.I., in a manner highly improper and disrespectful, and detriments to Military subordination and discipline. The above being in breach of the Articles of War.

J. WALLACH, Lt. Col. Com. 28th N.I. Seigaum, Nov. 23, 1843.
Finding—The Court having maturely weighed and considered the evidence before it, is of opinion that the prisoner, Assist.-Surg. Donald Macfariane, M.D., 18th Madras N.I., is Not Guilty of the first instance of the first charge—Not Guilty of the second invance of the first charge—Not Guilty of the second invance of the first charge—Not Guilty of the second invance of the first charge—Not Guilty of the second charge. MONUMENT TO CAPTAIN COOR.

To the Editor of the Nessel and Milliary Guestle.

Six.—I was much gratified on reading an article in your valuable Gazette of Saturday last, in relecance to a project now on lost to ever adminishment to our great surigator Captain Cook. I, however, feel it my duty to state, that I have not, in one one include, communicated to the public journals" the names of any of those gentlemen who have given the shove project their support, or have honoured ine with their correspondence on the autoject. In Tact, I do not think that the time has yet arrived when I should be justified in so doing. The matter will, I trust, very suon take a more tangible form, and then we shall have abundance of good mimes to place before the public, as supporters of the cause. In the meanwhile, I trust, Sir, that you will continue to give the undertaking your valuable assistance. It is to press alone that we must look to have the matter clearly brought before the notice of the public; and I feel convinced that when that is done, when it is generally known that there is no public monument to the memory of that. admirable man, the English nation will at once exspond to the call which is now being made upon them. I am, &c. EDWIN C. SOTTOR.

Title RWORD VXERCISE.

To the Editor of the Name and Military Gazette.

Sin,—About two or three weeks gines I send a letter in one of the Military Journals, in which-referring to the recent autions in India-Lieut.-Colonel Augelo very tus recent anosa in Inda—Indat-techt-Color Augelo very properly, in my opinion at least, calls the attention of hoto Officers and soldjars to make themselves musters of the weapons with which they me respectively armed; and he given the highest authority for the sword exercise heing properly attended to, by insertiffs the General Orders issued upon that subject by the Duke of Wellington at Cambray, in January, 1849.

I had accreely read the letter in question, when on looking over the "Asiatic Journal" of this month, the ntility of our system of sword exercise is strongly correborsted in the "Reminiscences of an Old Hand," where Captain Bellow (the author) says in page 626; ...." Pre-member on one occasion hearing the subject of the rela-tive merits of European and Hindostanes awordsmen broadled in the presence of the late Calcan to broached in the presence of the late Colonel Skinner, who commanded that aplended body of fregular Cavelry, known throughout India as 'Skinner's Horse,' and than whom no man could be considered a more commetent judge-or one (heing himself half a native) more likely to be impartial. Being asked his opinion, he said, that the skill of the native swordsmen has been much overrated. and that they are not equal to Europeans properly in-structed in their own way; that the native does not un-derstand a feint, and if he fails in his first cut (which, if it takes affect, is sure to be a unesser), he lays himself at the mercy of a practised adversary, well instructed in our Europaun sian de exercise."

In the following (627) page, is an interesting anco-dote of an English Cavalry Serjeant, which shows also that the much-talked of Mahratta Isnou is not so formidable to a well trained SWORDSMAN.

RELIGION IN THE ARMY. NEATH AND SET OF STREET AND SE

What opportunities for meditation are presented to the devout soldier in field exercise, or when on sontry in the dead hour of night, when that time which is generally considered tikenime, or otherwise passed in listicesness of mind, would afford one of the most happy sensons for contemposing the wonders of that etherest fabric to which his mind (from Religious instinct) would of necessity he directed; for, "Where a man's tressure is, there will his heart be also." Nor would be ever be dult or sad by resson of the midnight tempest. Knowing that "the Lord of Hosts is with him-that the God of Jacob is his refuge," he would be kept in perfect peace, amid the forked lightning's glare and the sound of 'Heaven's artillery thundering in the skies;' and though the earth should be convulsed to its centre—though the stars should fall from their spheres-all Nature be disorganised—and though his poor body should perish in the conflict,—yet his Soul would remain unscathed amid the wreck of empires and the crash of worlds."

Such, comrades, is the privilege of the Christian sol-dier—such the inestimable benefit of true religion. Do you wish me to define true religion (seeing that, unhappily, there are so many false in the world); I shall do it in one word. "Regeneration;" all that falls short of this is the mere form of godliness, without the power; and do you further wish to know how to discriminate between those who do and those who do not possess it? In auawaring this question, I shall give my own version of the matter-holdly appealing to the experience of all regenerate men in attentation of the correctness thereof. The truly religious man is he (whether Barbarian, Scythian, bond or free,) who loves the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, acknowledges lile divinity, as having power (and Itim only) to forgive sins ; he who having found out whether another is possessed of this secre, will not stop to inquire whether he be Churchman or Dissenter; Kpiscopalian or Presbyterien ; Quaker, Moravian, Independent, Baptist or Methodist; but who will take such a one by the hand, and bid him "God speed." This is what I apprehend to bt. "orthodox" Christianity.

Well, then, my friends, if this religion be se good-se simple-and productive of such present and everlasting oe and happiness, why not embrace it? Why cherish with such tenacity that fell poison which is the source of all your disquist, that which degrades and debases our common nature, turns our wit, our reason, our better part of man "the seamy-side without," and exhibits human nature in all its odious deformity. Have you eyes --- yet ate not? Have you ears -- yet hear not? Know you not that it is written in that Book which all the sophistry in .. the world has not been able to invalidate, that "Rightcourness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people ?' And if this be true as affecting a nation or a people, it is equally true of an individual. Yes, am is not only a national but an Individual diagrace; it compacmises the character of a man as a rational, intelligent being; the very sufference of it even, while such tremendons sacrifico has been made to wash out the gulify stain, besides evidencing the folly of the individual, involves an act of the blackest ingratifude - in that, though the Saviour has died, he will not believe it; or, believing, he is not affected by it; though uprey is offered, he will not avail himself of it; though judgment is denounced, he is indifferent to it. Great God I as it possible that pardon, indifferent to it. Great this 1 as it possible that paraon, peace, and eternal life, should be profered to man simply on renouncing this hellish, this fundish principle, Sin, and that he should be inscusse of the boon? Yet, so, unhappily, it is with the majority.

Oh! my dear comrades, I appeal to your best judgment if it is not better to be a servent of the most light God, than a slave of the devil- (he has given some of us bad kes anough, Heaven knows); and it you think so, then I intreat, I implore—uny, I adjure you to have "regard unto those things that make for your peace, before they are for ever hid from your eyes." And if you would be a few and they would be a state of the second o are for ever hid from your eyes." And it you would see the way more clearly pointed out, or the subject handled in a more forcible and interesting manner than I can possibly pretend to, I would earnestly recommend your attention to two publications, very small and cheap, emanating from the pen of Matross (who lately sounded the " Reveille" in these columns - a composition of such thrilling interest, and of so truly evangelical a character, that justly interest, and of so truly evangested a character, that justly entitles it to rank as a chef-d'aurere—it ought to be read at the head of every regiment in Her Majesty's Service;)—viz., "Red Conta and Blue Jaokets," and "The Christian Soldier's March;" in all of which the Military idiom is so happily blended with gospet truth, that makes such doubly attractive; and which, it is well known, have all the standards of the harmonics could have already been productive of the happiest comits. They are published by Hatchard, Piccadilly; and Sceley. Fleet-street; and any country bookseller would order single copies even, for those at a distance, who may wish to possess them; for civilians, as well as soldiers, may abke profit by their perusal, exhibiting, as they do in a remarkable manner, the beauty of holiness when allied with the profession of a soldier.

" Rternal God! Guide thou my footsteps in the way of truli, And, oh! assist me so to live on earth. That I may die in peace, and claim a place for thy hold dwelling. All but this is folly.—The varn timeions of deceitful life."

AN Ex-DRAGOUN.

"[Comrades! Since the above was put in type, subsequent events impel me to add a few lines, which I hope may acquire, additional weight and importance from the relative position of the parties. Seventeen years of continuous suffering from disease, contracted in the Army.

. Also on the eve of publication.

has at length brought me (as I firmly apprehend) to the borders of the grave—indicated by rapid decline, and the relapse of the nervous system to its infuncy again, In all human probability, this is the last admonition from the pen of the writer. And whilst the earth, with all its various associations and avocations -- it noise and bustle, vanity and strife—is gradually reced-ing, my sole support and consolation — with the proct of Eternity before mea-is derived from the h edness of that Religion which I now, with more than solemn earnestness, refferate and enforce on your attention and practice. O embrace it! For God's sake, trifle not with matters of such awful import as Death, Judgment, and Eternity involve! The man that is mad enough to do so, is a fitter candidate for Bediam than any poor wretch there incarcerated. May God give us all grace to amend our lives according to this Holy Word, through Jesus Christ, our blessed Lord and Saviour! Amen, and Amen.]

THE RANK OF ENQUIRE, &c.

To the Editor of the Nepel and Military Casette.

Sir, In suswer to your correspondent, who signs himself An Old Gentlements Son, permit me to make some few remarks on the title of Esquire, which he seems to have taken up so wermly.

A Captain in the regular Army is an Esquire of the highest degree, having received from the Queen, under her hand and seal, a commission thus: " To our trusty and world-heloued A. B., ESQUINE, greeting," &c., and, therefore, his right to the title Esquine, so created by Letters Patent, is an good as that of any Nobleman to his Peerage.

When a man receives the lessour of Knighthood, it is not the mere use of the sword that gives him the title, but that of the Queen addressing him as Sir so and so, Knight.

Now, your correspondent is quite mi taken as regards Mayura and Aldermen, for they are neither Esquires nor Gentlemen by law, but generally styled so by courtesy.

He is also mistaken as regards estates giving that title, for on the authority of Spelman and other eminent men who have written on the subject, it is stated that no estate, however large, confers this rank upon its owner t

I agree with you, Sir, that Captains of Yeomaney are, most penerally, men of noble families; but still their commissions from the Lord Lleutenants of the counties cannot give them the title of E-quire; and I think thus perfectly right, because it requires no qualification to hold such an appoint nent, and in this county the Senior Cantain of a Yeomanry regiment is an Attorney, and there was, if not now, a Brewer who held a like commission in the same corps.

The Militia, which ought to be our national force, was, I believe, more abused during the wat there being no deficulty in procuring commissions as the most interior classes. The Captains and Subalterns of the most interior classes. The Captains and Field-Officers were obliged to qualify, as these generally consisted of noblemen and gentlemen, but whether entitled to the rank and title of Esquire in virtue of their commissions, I cannot say, for in them it is stated that their names have been certified to Her Majesty, who has been graciously pleased to confirm the appointment which, I should say, gives them the title and rank of Esquire.

Ser, I have had the honour to serve in the Lane, in the Militia, and in the Yeomanry; permit me then, for I am an enthusization aristocrat, to propose in future that the Field-Officers and Captains of Militis regiments be composed of noblemen, baronets, and gentlemen possessing the greatest estates in their counties, and let them serve without puy; that the Subaltorns and Staff-Officers be the younger sons of men of good old families, for they always make the best soldiers, receiving pay. In this latter assertion I am supported by Major-General Sir C. Napier, who in his admirable work on Military Law, page 237, says: The man of ancient lineage, with an empty purse, makes the best soldier; his tamily history, in some degree, connects him from childhood with the Army; his carfiest ideas are associated with war, and give his character a bend that way."

A REAL ERQUIRE.

THE DESPATCHES AND LETTERS OP ADMIRAL LORD VISCOUNT NELSON.

PITE DESPATCHES AND LETTERS

Despatches and Despatches, the direct naval Hero have been written, no attempt has yet been made to collect his Letters and Department, and thus to reader him, in a great degree, has even integrapher. The value of auch documents, and the powerful manner in which they enhance a fler's fame, are shown by the publication of the "Despatches of the Duke of Wellington," to which this Work will be a fitting, if not a necessary companion.

Important as are the illustrations which this Collection will afford of Naval History, during the most glorious period in its annals, the chief interest for the public generally, consists in the information it will contain of the private character of Navan mithout the glitter of biographical encomium, the mistaken zeal of biographical asuppressions, and the "tombings up" or biographical painting. His ardent particism, his proressional deviation, his generous sympathy with the success or the misicatunes of his brother Officers, his unremitting efforts to promote their wishes, and his complete identification with that feelings, are so strongly depicted in his Letters, that admiration of the Hero is almost lost in affection for the Man. As Nelson thought and felt, he spoke and wrote. Hence the few weakupeases of his noble mind are as appagent as its powers; and this singleness of purpose, and divergent of mere effect, inpart to his Correspondence a sincerity and freshness, as delightful as they are rare. To the historical value of the "Despatches of the Duke of Wellington," it is intended to insert every Letter of Lord Relations of any intagest (except those to Lady Hamilton), and no effort will be left untried to officials such Despatches and Letters as have not yet been printed. For assistance in this essential object, the Reliter condicantly appeals to judicities of home project frame arrival to dis

DURE AND COOL WATER. - Naval DURE AND COOL WATER. — Naval Co.'s PATENT TRAVELLING WATER PILTERS a most desirable acquisition. They are warranted to remove colour, taste, and ameli, from every kind of water, and to make hard water soft. They have been in extremire use for many years, and gre well known to be the most effectual, convenient, and durable filters ever invented. In warm climates—where good whole-some water is seldom met with—they will be found invaluable, as they not only render the most stagment water clear and sparking set the finest spring, but also keep the bater very cool; they are most convenient in size for travelling, very simple in their construction, not liable to get out of order, and will last for many years, a desideratum not to be found in others—30c. each. During the past week some very interesting experiments have been made in Woolstich diskyard, with the new compressed fuel for steamers, and the result of which has shown that the compressed fuel has an advantage over the ordinary coal, in the process of generating steam, of nearly thirry per cent, in addition to which a great saving is gained in the stowage, as a ton of the fuel will not occupy more than two-thirds of the space which is required for the same quantity of coal. Three hundred tone of the fuel has been ordered to be prepared for Her Majesty's yacht Victoria and Albert.

In addition to the steam-vessels already named to i placed under the command of Capt. W. H.M.'s STRAM-PRIGATE " WILSOMPONOS."-We en nounced in our Guzette of the 6th last, that this injenticle vessel was lost in the curly part of February last, on the coast of Africa. She was engaged in the late unfortunate Niger expedition, and no vessel in Her Mejesty's florrice was more commodiously fitted up them the Willingforce. Since the felture of that expedition the last team commitsince the farrier or that expection are any some communi-sioned to the Sarrier on the coast of Africa, and was, re-communited Lieut.-Com. appears that on the 2d of that month the Wilberforce was proceeding on a cruise along the Gambia, when, at about ten o'eleck at night, the air bright and clear, the Officers and erew were alarmed by the vessel striking heavily upon apparently, a sunken rook, which subsequently proved correct, it being situate on the cast side of the Dog Lieut. Moore had the paddle-box life-boats got affort in case of necessity, and then every exertion was directed to get the ship off the recks; her guns were thrown overthe racks; her guns were thrown overboard, also her orbles, mohors, shot, and stores; but, notwithstanding, she became a fixture, and by the following day it was found that the vessel was completely settled on the island, and the edge of the rock was protruding through her bottom, and she was half full of water. On the intelligence arriving at Eathurst, St. Mary's, the Governor, accompanied by most of the Masters and Captains of the merchant-vessels than lying in the harbour, and other assistance, proceeded to the wreek, in the hope of getting her of. Her masts and all the rigging were taken out of her, as well as a portion of her materials, but still she remained as firm as before, consequently will become a total wreck. Part of her crew have been to back to St. Mary's, where they await further orders. The Wilberforce was the largest vessel built for the Niger expedition, and was, we understand, upwards of 600 tons burden. When fitted out at Woolwich, about three years tince, she was the admiration of Her Majesty, Prince Albert, the King of Belgium, the Duchess of of Cambridge, and, in fact, all the Royal Family and Nobility, who visited the deckyard for the purpose of inspecting the vessel, and the other steamer built for the inspecting the vessel, and the other steamer built for expedition. Her loss is to a very considerable extent.

ROYAL NAVAL BENEVOLENT SOCIETY .- On Monday the quarterly meeting of the donors and subscribers of this society, which was fully attended, took place at the Tratched-house Tavern, St. James's, Admiral Lord Redstock being in the chair. Among the distinguished Officers present were Admiral Sir Thomas Briggs, Admiral Deans Dundse, M.P., Captain Whish, Captain Macshell, Lieut. Bedford, Captain Fead, and several others. The principal object the meeting had in view was to pass a resolution of condolence to the wides of the late Admiral Francis Pane. The noble chairman in sulogisting the memory of the gallant Officer, stated, that in three years he had subscribed no less a sum than 320% to the Royal Naval school at Camberwell. The following resolution was passed on the motion of Admiral Briggs :-brance of the munificent support bestowed on the Royal Naval Benevolent Society by the late Rear-Admiral Francis Fane, desires to record its deep regret at his se, to offer its sincore condolence to his inmented dame widow, and to express its sympathy with her under the beary affliction which she has experienced in his loss, and that Adultal Stapford, as president of the Society, be requested to convey the same to her." It was announced at the sum expended in relief during the past quarter to various applicants, being widows or orphans of deceased Officers, amounted to 552/, 18s., while the receipts had been 1142/, during the same time. The secretary also stated, that although the receipts were on the inc still they were not sufficient to gover the expenses. Donstions to the amount of 584 were announced, the greater part of which was subscribed by the company present. Admiral Sir Willoughby Lake was appointed vice-prosidont in the room of Admiral Sir Graham Moore, deceased; and thanks being voted to Lieut. Brady for his exertions abroad in add of the acciety, the business of the day ter-

Among the numbrous improvements in the building and equipment of reacts, there are few more important than the introduction of the new block, which will be the means of preventing many an accident. The experiments commented by fitting six 32-possible shells from two please of ordinance, placed at 400 yards distance from the believed, the object sguinet which they were directed. The first shall entered the mound on the east side of the bulkhead, and exploded, tearing up the parth with great violence, and the second cutered the mound nearly in the same place, and seth a similar effect. The third shall went through the hulkhead and entered the mound to a considerable distance history it exploded, which is then did, nestlering a large quantity of earth in all directions. The fourth entered the snound and ex-pluded nearly similar to the first and second. The fifth and sinch shells both entered the bulkheud, and went into the mound at the rear before they exploded, nearly in a sloular manner as in the experiment with the third shall,

The remaining part of the atternors was possibled in somephing the usual service rockets with others invented by Livut. Boxer, M.A. Six of each were fred at a range of 500 yards, and six of each at a range of 1000 yards, and those at the long range were excellent, Librat. Hoxer's being generally uniform in their progress, and proceeding the whole distance with good effect, and the others per-formed their duty remarkably well. Mr. Hele, an inventor, tried four rockers on his principle, fired from an open trough instead of a tube, as was the same with Lieur. Bozer's and the service rockets. Mr. Hale's first reduct, weighing about 30 lbs., discharged at a range of 800 yds., was raised to a great elevation in the air, and foll nearly, if not wholly expended at the mound. The second fell to the westward considerably: the third benefit the trough, and theofragunuts fell fuln the candi, at ab yards distant, and a little to the reer of the line of its discharge. The fourth made neveral evolutions in the air, and fell considerably to the westward before it had gone buil the range. The experiments concluded at half-4 o'slock r.m.

Mr. Buckingham, without stating what his principle is, maintains that his invention is not on either of the concussion or percussion principles, and esserts that he can move about his shells with the greatest safety, and even let them fall on the ground without the least danger of exploding; and that he can regulate their bursting with the greatest exactness, after a given number of seconds from the time of their being fired, and that in no instance will they burst in or at the mouth of the gun. On examin ing one of the cavities formed by the explosion of one of the shells in the mound we found about a yard in length of copper wire, which had evidently been a part of the contents of the shell, and it is therefore probable Mr. Buckingham's invention is upon the principle of a galvanic battery. Our neighbours in France who watched narrowly all Warner's experiments with his professed Our neighbours in France who water terrific power, which was to effect such a revolution in warfarr, if the Government of this country or any other country had purchased his discovery, were perfectly estimited that the experiments carried on by Mr. Warner were accomplished by galvanic agency. Mr. Buckingham will, no doubt, have further opportunities afforded to him to test the merit of his invention in avery possible way it might have to be used in actual service, an id a most prac rical and highly-qualified committee to report upon its real value and espablity for the service of the country. Mr. Warner would never consent to the experiments with his invention being made at Woolwich, and consequently the Government acted wisely in declining to purchase it.—

fMr. Warner, in a letter to the Times this week, denies that any emissary of the French Government, or native of that country, has yet had any opportunity of witnessing, much less of " narrowly watching," a single trial of his powers. Nor has any Commissioner of Her Majesty's Government been yet made acquainted with the accret agent he employs. He also states " that he was never required to exhibit experiments at Woolwich, where, inshoul, they could not, for want of space and other reasons, the satisfactority demonstrated;" and that nothing is more mistaken than the assertion that this Government have rejected his proposals on the merits.]

heartily thank our contemporary for bringing forward the case :—

"It is mest probably known to our readers that in 1836 an order emanated from the Horse Guarda dadjaring that the widow of in Officer who had served for a less pation than 18 years shall be entitled to a pension. It is not our present purpose to discuss the propertiety of such an order, so herial it relates to the widows of those who have entered the service as because which we notice the subject with the most elesers wishes that the authorities at the Horse Guarda will, tupon consideration, oune to the just and charnable constaints that the case which we now hy before our readers does sed souli within the spirit of the order of 1830—a cold interpretation may bring it within its letter. The sad case is this:—A gallant solder severed for 20 years in the panks of the 78th Regiment, for 28 of which he was a mon-commissioned Officer. He rose to the rank of Serj.-Major, eserving in the West and Rast Indies, and was at length, through the unsided recommendation of his own merits, promoted to an Emigrary in the 78th Regt. From that scorps he was removed to the 28th Regt., and served in the late campaign under Sir Chan. Nagler, in Sounds, where he fell a viction to that illness which, more than the enemy's fire, thinned our brave Army. At the time of his steath this Officer was soting Adjulant to a wing of the regiment, and we are assured that had a variancy occurred, his gallant Communder, Colonel Pennefeather, who has often spoken of him as one of the best Officers and soldiers he ever knew, would have made him Adjutant to the regiment. The widow of this old soldier and Officer applies for the usual pension; she is met by the Order of 1888, and told that she has no claim, inaminch as her husband had not served his Rovereign as a Communisationed Officer for tan years. In the shame of common justice, is this the fitting answer to give to the widow of a galla-stackier who, though not promoted to an Ensigncy until 1888, had been fittinilly serving in every subordinate grade of the protession from 1816? The case of this widow is still further aggreeated, by the misfortune of her having to maintain two daughters by a former marriage of her last gallant husband. Most elementy do we hope that the Authorities at the Horse Guards may reconsider this case, which is not more distressing than it will be afflicted widow be rapulable by the suffecting interpretation of an Order which never contemplants ascens a claim."

My dear Sir,—In conformity with the request you have made me, I now place in your hands a statement I have drawn up of the circumatances that immediately preceded that fearful concernee which has deprived me of a gallant and foodly-loved-husband, rendering me at the same instant one of the most wretched women now living.

I had received on voluntarily giving no evidence on this wretched subject, or of saying anything littely to increase the crime laid to the charge of my sister's husband, but patience and interance will have their limits, and the wishes of my friends must be obeyed. You are, therefore, my dear Sir, at literity to make what use you please of this statement, in which I have repeated correctly every circumstance that occurred, to the heat of my belief and recollection, mut from any inspressions! have since received; and I have severy reason to hope and thick that I have not made a single error or omission.

Many persons may deem the conversations that passed between my husband and myself of too triviel, and light a character for one in my deplorable situation to repeat, nor do I make public the few archeones (in my eyes nucred, and depply engraven on my memory) spoken in confidence by my husband, with his well-known candour and openness, without doing great violence to my (celings; but I conseder nothing else could half so pishing exhibit the absence of all nancorous fishing towards Lieut. Manro on the part of both my husband and myself. Until now I nave constantly regretted the knowledge I had of what was taking place, but since I have seen the ville and dishonourable impuriations thrown upon the memory of my adored inspeads, I rejuice from my very heart that I am enabled (from personal knowledge of what did pass) to desire those imputations and in-sineations to be utterly false and antionades; and, as I hope, have proved them to be of although from the very fast of my having thus power, and the stations that and antionades; and, have proved them to be so: atthough from the very fact of my having this power, severe community may be made upon me by those who have never been placed to a similar situation.

Narrative of the Voyages and Services of the Namesis, from 1840 to 1843; and of the Combined Navat and Military Operations in China; comprising a Complete Account of the Colony of Hong-Rong, and Remarks on the Character and Habits of the Chingses. From Notes of Commander W. H. Hall, R.N. With Personal Observations, by W. D. Barnard, Roq., A.M., Ones. 2 vols. Svo. H. Colburn. [Becond Notice.]

We recume our notion of these highly important volumes, Consistent to the last, Commissioner Lin, when super-sided by the new Imperial Commissioner, Keshen, at Center

Caston, "Goods not resist giving a paring warsing to the people, against the continuance of their persions a habite; and he even ventured to assure them that, if they still person of, "and he further took them, quality enough, that, "while the afforded period of their probation was notyer failined, they were still figure election; but that when it had expired they would become deed office, for that they would certainly be put to debth, if they had not learnt to amend their ways."

Keeben was a man of a very different character. At first, his desire, like that of Lin, seemed to be "to con-trol the foreigners, and to reduce them to submission !" but, " instead of precipitating the orisis by mad vivisuos, trat, "Instead of precipitating the orisis by and vivision, he problesed to trust rather to the "amployment of trush and the admest repeat to obtain his easis."

"Sended's musticonness was at once shown by the instructions which he issued respecting the eatine of the white fug, and by his espiciating that for the fature the truops were 'mid rathly he open their artister, without first ancertaining what was the purpose of the approach of any boat bus, ing anch a flag," and, moreover, that 'they were not to presude insultities, but being the first to from the foreign ships, nor in their desire for homestration and environmental, Biovertheless, in added, "approaching a mer per self-ship, and the troops must not be said of their general."

action of Chusippee (Jan. 7) a Chinese squadron of war-junks was totally destroyed.

"The wary first (Congrave) rocket fired from the Namesia was seen to enter the large junk against which it was directed, may that of the Admiral, and almost the instant afterwards it blaw up with a terrific explosion, launching into etersby overy soul on board, and pouring fourth its blaze like the mighty rush of first from a volcano. The instantaneous destrugitou of the large hady seemed appairing to both sides engaged. The smoke, and flame, and thunder of the explosion, with the broken fragments salling round, and even portune of dissevered bothes acsitering as they fell, were enough to strike with awe, if not with fear, the stoutest heart that torked upon it."

Many of the details connected with this affair are exceedingly curious: Amongst others—

"A number of strong fishing-neis were isstened all round the sides of the junks, not extended so as to impede any one trying to get on board, but trised up outside over each of the guns, in such a way that, when our boats should come alongwise, the nets were to be thrown over them, wen and all; and thus our july tars, of course, as he [the Admiral] insegmed, struck powerless with fear, were to be caught like insigs in their form, and handed over with great facility to the tender mercies of the emperor."

The tables had long been turned against the Chinese: "Keshera had long over turned against the Cantann in "Keshera that his conduct should be subjected to the severest consideration;" while poor old Kwan was scoped of being "at all times devoid of talent to direct, and, on the approach of a crisis, to be alarmed, perturbed, and without resources."

The grand conference between Keshen and Captain Elliet, at the Second Bar, some miles above the Bogue, is very circumstantially described: it was an affair of wast coremony,; but it fails not within our compass of

"Keenen could not resist the wish to gratify his carlosity concerning our fine-looking fellows, the Markes, and three of the tailest and finest men were selected for his personal examination. He did not conceal his surprise, and even requested that they night be made to go through mane of their evolutions. Keshen also examined their arms and accountements inimutally, for everything was, of course, perfectly new to him." A confidence in manner throughout is described as having been particularly kind, gentlemanties, and perfectly dignified. He night, indeed, he called a courtler-like gentleman in any country."

After the capture of the Bogue Forts—

"The charges preferred against this able and straight-forward man, by the Lieutenant-Governor of Canton, were of the true Chinese stamp—namely, his having held intercourse with about him, particularly the late prefect; this having presented the Officers and garrieons at the Bogue from doing wonders; and, above all, his having put his east to a document, by which

"Had the local authorities been over so sincere in their expressions of a desire for peace, the remembrance of the fale of the unfortunate Keslien, for even treating with the 'rebellious foreigners,' might have made thest tremble for their lives. The degradation and banishment of Lin were also fresh in their memory; but the following sections upon Keslen was inflicient to terrify them into the must desperate efforts. It was during this interval that they received the emperor's edict, by which Keshen was declared to be guilty of bribery, and unworthy to live; his temple was to be sealed up, and his whole family put in irons, and carried by the bin to Pakin, where both he and they with him were [to be] pulped death on the very day of their errors when hy being 'cut as under at the waist,' and they by decapitation."

This terrible denuaciation, in the exadernment of the emperor's wrath, was enough to alarm the whole nation p but, furtunately, it was not carried into execution to the letter, and Keehen's life was spared, though with the loss of every thing that could make it tolerable."

Taken public notice of the action against the batteries of Anunghoy, a very desking thing was done by Commander Bullivan, who was serving as a subsequencerary Commander on board the Medille. One of the banks got adult, owing to some accident, and was being careful by the tide close in under the batteries. The instant this was perceived by Commander Bullivan, he jumped into his gig, and pulled off to recover the boat, in doing which he was or course apposed in the close fire of the batteries, but he fortunefully escaped unburt, and brought the boat safely back."

The story of Captain Amstrather's capture in the neighbourhood of Chusan-like being tied up in a stack, and carried over in a boat to Ningpo, &c., are well known. "Captain Anstruker, hewever, would seem to have been more lemently treated than many of the other prisoners; and I have been him declare that, with remost to the better chan of mandarins at Ningpo, he had little cause of complaint to argue against them, considering that he was a prisoner in an enemy's hands. His taient for drawings however, enabled him to consider their good will, and to using for himself come indulgences which others were not formance amongs to precure. Conciency of Walreddon. A Romance of the West. By Mrs. Bray. Author of "Henry de l'omeroy;" "The White Hoods;" "Trials of the Heart;" "Trelawny;" "De Foix," &c. 3 Vols.

BESTDES works of a different character, taking-justly or unjustly, we shall not now pause to inquire—a more elevated range in iterature, "Courtemy of Walreddon" completes about thirty volumes of fiction from the pen of Mrs. Bray, in the course of a few years. The number of this ledy's productions, however, is less remerkable than their quality; as, in full proportion to their numerical increase is the increase in their interest and value.

We have always considered Mrs. Bray's historical We have always considered Mrs. Bray's historical romaness to possess more of the true Walter Scott feeling than those of any other writer. In them we trace the same high qualities by which the flations of Sir Walter are so pre-sminently distinguished;—a profound knowledge of the human heart—extensive research in local history and tradition — admiration of the grand and subline in acture—highly poetical descriptive powers busines in manner—nighty poetical descriptive powers— love of antiquarian lore—just such a gentle leaning towards the superstitious and supernatural as may suffice to impart, occasionally, a mysterious interest to certain events. Superadded to these merits, Mrs. Bray has, in one respect, infinitely the advantage of Sir Walter Scott: she constructs her fable most ably; bearing away the mind of the reader, absorbingly and unflaggingly, to the point of a grand climax, and keeping back the dispussment till the final descent of the curtain upon a rich tableau. ill the final descent of the curtain upon a rich tableau. In home of her productions is this principle more fully, more effectively, carried out than in the volumes now before us. And the object is not gained by violant or improbable means; all is easy, simple, natural, and connegatity successful. The story itself is introduced by an inginious finition which happily relieves the author from all apparent responsibility in point of manner. Without wild or intragent excitement, "Courtenay of Walreddon" has a strong and sustained interest, heightened by means of heavyling manner. The incidents themselves by much of beautiful repose. The incidents, though spiling, see so natural, so full of desmatic force and the characters are so diversified, so distinct, so that the impression on the mind of the reader is, truthtrue—that the impression on the mind of the reaser is, that he is perusing a veritable history. Speaking of "Counteney of Walreddon," as we would of a picture, he artistic phrasology, we should say, that it is "finely appropriate" the parm are all in harmony, producing a grand and perfect whole.

A monument slee of a different nature, less coatig, and equally darable, and conferring advantage on the public as well as pleasure on its more immediate object, might be raised in hostour of our author, by the reprint of all her remandes in a seek, compact, and hexpended form.

This would be accentable to themsends.

It has been said, that a critique is never complete neless, like an epigram, it has a sting in its tail—woless it indentes something to be found fuelt with. We shall not besitze, therefore, to express our high and mighty displeasure towards Mrs. Brsy, and a vast number of other writers, masculing as well as feminise, for taking the trouble—up alight one—of hunting out motions to place at the beads of their shipters. For our own past, we always religiously abstain from resuling them; they tell us too much of the author's safed beforehand.

We find, also, a double-dyed villain, an aunoitigated monster, in the person of Father Philip, secretary to the Elector, confessor to the Carmelite numery of Bonn, &c.—Elies Wolfgang, a victous, sangularry, half-mark, fauntical Anahaptist—Nathan, a benevolent Jew-and a variety of other characters, all of them more or ious accessary for filling up the mayes. Eva Walberg, the Perceter's Daughter, as the heroine, who effects her escape from the aunnery in a most extraordinary manner -- is captured, and persecuted to the deeth, by Father Philip and the infamous old Abbess—is a fine portraiture of female character. Tried, and convicted of heresy and of violating her vous. Tried, and convicted of heresy and of violating her vows, also to consigned to an under ground diageous, to perial by starvation. Through the humano-intervention, however, of the Elector, added by Nathan and by her consinteer, Hermans, she is happily rescued. Agnes, Countage Mansfeld, the bride of Gubbard, is a very sweet little skatch. Although termed a "Tale of the Referention," the resder of this work is by no means amonged by theological discussion. The incidents are of a lively, staging, and existing character; with quite enough of the romantic to estimic any moderate appetite.

Naval & Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, APRIL 20, 1844.

THE debats on the motion of Sir A. L. Hay, on Tuesday lest, ended most lamely and impotently, as many feared it would, by being coldly met by the House, and consequently withdrawn by the gallant Member, rather than leave a vote of ingratitude to the defenders of their epuatry on the records of Parliament. In our opinion, it would have commanded more attention had the motion included all the surgiving Officers and men, Navai and Military, who had served during the yer from 1793 to

To all who witnessed the debate it was evident that Sir Henry Hardinge spoke under difficulties, personal and official-under the conflicting feelings of the chivalrous Soldier and of the delegated organ to express opinions of high authority as Secretary at-Wer. We soon heard sufficient to satisfy us that there, was an unseen, but not an unfeit, opposition to the motion, from the highest quarters, and against which a struggle was utterly useless.

The result of the debate must impress the Old Soldiers of the war with a sed consistion that their services, while acknowledged to be great, are yet too great to be repaid-" Virtus laudatur et alget." They have been too long the patient creditors of their desply-indebted country; and now, in their old days, have found that Yankee "Repudiation" is the order of the day. Is this the modern reply to "Date cholum Belisario?"

We have given the Debate at length, as the readers of this Gazette and ourselves may often have to refer to it. Sir Andrew Leith Hay did his duty manfully; Colonel For was absent; but Lord Arthur Longoz arconded the motion: and the speeches of both, se well as that of the ever staunch " ()ld Commodore," Sir Charles Napier will not disappoint the United Service. Our table is covered with communications, many of them expressing very bitter sentimenta at the leave of the motion. Can this be wondered at ? We select two, simply on account of their moderation.

IT has ever been our al , as Military Journalists, to rescue from oblivion, the draw from obscurity, a numes of distinguished en, whom "the whipe and sor's wrong, the proud man's scorns of time, the oppr contumely," or perchang the mere caprice of fortune, may have made the prey dull forgetfulness. In pursuance of this most sherified purpose, we have, from time to time, culled attaction to the valuable services rendered in the recent dars, both in India and China, by various gallant Offices, on whose bright deeds corresponding favour does not seem to have been bestowed.

A Military friend has recently brought to our notice the long gallant and faithful services of another veteran Officer, whose pareer we deem it our duty to chronicle.

Brevet-Major Cuine, atthe 26th Regiment, has now served his country nearly Mairty years—his first commisserved his country manify addrive years—his first commission being dated July, 1884. During this long period, he has served uninterruptedly in India and China, without once obtaining furleath. He is a Licutenant of June, 1819; a Captain of December, 1827; and a Brevet-Major of December, 1866. Major Caine served in the Nepal War of 1815, and was present with the Light Company of the 17th Fibr, at the action of Jeetgurh. He likewise served in the December, and at the victory of Jhubbulpoor sless with his own hand, in defence of the regimental colours an Arab Chieftain. When the of the regimental volcues an Arab Chieftein. When the British forces invested shurtpers, under Lord Combermere, the subject of the sketch, who had exchanged to the 14th Foot, was applied Brigade-Major to the 1st Infantry Brigade, and, suring the progress of the siege, rendered important services. On the morning of the storm (18th January, 1826), he killed three of the enemy in personal could be and when the amountains enemy in personal coulds; and, when the ammunition of the advanced column of the 14th had been expended, led a small party of vol hierers over a midpart of considerable extent, which had been re-manned by the enemy, through whom he successfully cut his way, and returned with reinforcements as well as ammunition. On this service he was wounded in the feet by a grane-shot. service he was wounded in the feet by a grape-shot, whilst charging the enemy's guns. Majer-General Sir Thomas Reynell thus reknowledges in his despetch the gallant deeds we have not noticed :-- "Major Beard reports that Brigade Major Onine, of H.M.'s 14th npanial har statement, and distinguished on two statements the subject of this tribute of friendship (for we are indebted to one of rie old comrades for these details) volunteered to lead the Foriern Hope. In the 14th Foot he was Regimental Judge-Advocate, and frequently performed the duties of Adjutant. He also on many occasions officiated as Disputy Judge-Advocate-General of the Meerut Division, as wall as Brigade-Major of that station.

In 1834, when the force was didered against Joudpon Mujor Coins (now in the 26th Foot) was appointed Brigade-Major to the let brigade, under General Oglander; but Mann Sing having come to terms before the investone apportunitation to the pupils; the impute the meant of his fortress, this brigade was sometimended some who served with the Army in Egypt, and was becaused by the Grand Seignor at the close of that arduous campaign. On seeing it I mentally said, 4 I will try and for service in China, Major Caine, then only a Captain, was at first selected as Adjutant-General, but it having been afterwards determined by Government that the heads of departments should consist of Field Officers, Lieute Colonel Mountain-than whom a better nomination could not have been made—was gazetted to the situation. The appointment of Deputy Judge-Advocate-General was then tendered, but the Major preferred remaining on the staff of the ever-to-be-inmented General Oclander, on which he had been serving since 1839, to accepting a situation comparatively of a civil character. At the capture of Chusan he commanded the Grenadier company of the Cameronians, and after the fall of that folund, was appointed one of the British Commissioners, as also Chief Megistrate of the place. But it is not as the mere soldier that Millor Caine is known in India; his polished manners, honourable character, and general ability, obtained him the asteem and friendship of a succession of General and other Officers on whose staff be has served. General Hardyman, Colonel Edwards (killed at Bhurtpore), Brigadier M'Combe, Sir Samford Whittingham, and lastly General Oglander, "the good and the brave," have successively been his friends and supporters. Even in a higher quarter his merita were appreciated in a distinguished manner, he having been elected as Aide-de-Camp, in 1839, by the Governor of Bengal to accompany Prince Henry of the Netherlands from Calcutta to Lucknow, Agre, and Delhi.

In May, 1841, he was specially chosen to fill the important and arduous post of Chief Magistrate of Hong-Kong. Cast, as it were, on the side of a barren mountain, with literally nothing but a mat hut to shield him from the weather, the "Chief Magistrate" was left to his own resources for "an establishment." Without Architect or Engineer, a suitable Jail, Court-house, &c., rose under his indefatigable industry and auspices; and where the wild dog howled three years ago, the houseless stranger, or old friend, now finds a warm and hospitable reception. Frequently did he solicit, during the progresse. of the war, to be allowed to join his regiment; but the discriminating Statesman at the head of affairs in China had found in him a men capable of something more than hunting down the long tails."

The aubjoined reply to one of his applications needs no comment from us; and, we feel assured, only requires to be known in the proper quarter to be duly appreciated.

(lighed) J. R. Monnison, Actg. Secretar Lain Caine, Calet Magistrate, Hong-Kong

When the termination of hostilities turned upon the Army of Chine that profuse stream of honour which, in its undiscriminating course, too often poured rank and ribbons upon untried boys, to the exclusion of bearded and war-acathed men, what fell to the lot of this veteranthis suiding of many a real fight -whom general intelligence and superior qualifications excluded from those scenes of mimio was which had been enacted along the coast? Nothing! literally nothing! the Brevet rank Major Caine now holds having come to him for length of service, in common with all other Captains of his standing in the Army; tehilat the Commissary-General, the Judge-Advocete-General, the Paymester-General-Officers usually sidered sivil-were severally promoted and honoured with the C.S.

It is far from our intention to undervalue the services of the troops amployed in China; but this we will say, that it is for pessive endurance, rather than active de of heroism, that they deserved well of their country. In the eyes of a Praimentar veteran, such as General Schoedde, who had been one Aundred times under the fire of French men, what must have been the fighting in China? Indeed, the gallent Civier himself, Lord Selson, and others of our land A peed, must have been equally emsible of the near appreximation to child's play of the active part of this campaign. It is not, therefore, to deeds of chivalry—though we feel confident, bad the occasion offered, such would not have been writing—that the heroes of China owe their honours. Why, then, we would ask, has not the Chief Magistrate of Hong-Kong, who did participate in the early operations of the war, and whose desire it was to be employed subsequently, receive some pensing tribute from the tide of fortune? Surely the early hardship and exposure of a residence at Hong-Kong, were equal to any endured by the troops along the count; whilst the risks, as regards sickness—the chief cause of enseablies in China—have been equally imminent.

The services of several of those on whom Fortune poered her favours so lavishly in China, would not bear a mement's comparison with those of Major Caine. But, unfortunately, that Officer's early achievements were performed in the humble grade of Subalters—a rank, the bright deeds of which, like Sydney Smith's American Bills, have been too often "repudiated."

A BROCHURE has recently made its appearance under the title of " Naval Rank," which is intended to show that Rank, as expressed by its present titles, is " a Neval Wrong and a National Injury." The Author signs himself " Nevelle ; " but, from our present view of his pamphiet, we are disposed to think there are many who will use the " prefix " Torodo, so thoroughly would his maxims tend to destroy the best bulwarks of our isle. Among many propositions, which will by all but the Author be deemed abourd, there is, however, a certain amount of clear reasoning and good argument; and it is only when we come to his deductions, that we find the tramp he has been leading us of no earthly good. To style Lieutenants Captains, and continue to Commanders their present designation-to call a Captain " Lieutenant-Commodore," and Commodores " Commandants," is to our comprehension much more " stopid and unmeaning" than the "prefix" of "post," which " Navalis," and not the Regulations, applies to Captain. " Nevalle" sets out by discussing the rank of Midship. man, whom he wishes to call " Ensign" (or " Sub-Lieutenant.") The Author draws a parallel between the Naval Midshipman and the Army Ensign, because they hold the same comparative rank, but appears to forget that there is a vast difference between the duties which the two Officers have to learn. The Midshipman has to gain a practical as well as theoretical knowledge of a difficult profession, and to acquire experience in the performance of duties which he should know how to execute, since he will afterwards have to see them properly carried out. He is, therefore, necessarily in a state of pupilage, but is, nevertheless, invariably treated as an Officer and a gentlemen. If in society, we ask " Navalle" whether a Middy, with his pipeclayed collar, is thought a whit less bonourable than the Ensign in his showy regimentals ?-whether the youthful Midehipman is not always eligible to be the honoured guest even of reyelty? The Buelgo, on the other hand generally purchasse a Commission, and is put upon duties of so distinct a nature to those of the sailor, that it is not necessary for him to undergo the same probation.

To compare more minutely the duties of these two Officers would be profities, and we arrive at the conclusion that the Midshipman had better be suffered to remain a Midshipman, until having arrived at the proper age, and having served his probationary term, and passed his examinations, he emerges, daily qualified, from his chrysalls.

The next rank is most certainly open to improvement. The title Mate, or Master's Mate, as it was formerly, is unusualing and ridiculous; but where shall we find the substitute? "Nevalle" would call him a Lieutenant; but, if so, is he also prepared to renommend the transfer of this Officer to the ward-room? Could he, we ask, refuse the Naval Lieutenant a subin, and to be a ward-room Officer, while the Marine Lieutenant had those privileges? and if he should agree to this step also, will he obligingly add to the mext edition of his pumphlet an appendix containing a plan for constructing eight cabins | appointments, furloughs, and sick lists, there are revely in first-rates, seven in accond-rates, dec. &c.

To device a new title for the Mate is no easy matter. It is clear that he is qualified for a Lieutenant's Commission, but the passed Assistant-Surgeon and the passed Clerk are equally qualified for the higher rapks, and might, with equal right, claim an altered name. The title Sub-Lieutenant is objectionable, and Second Lieutenant would be aqually so; for hy adopting either of the above titles, great revolutions must also take place in other ranks, and the whole framework of Naval discipling be disturbed. The title of Assistant-Lieutenant appears to us best fitted to convey the fallest meaning, and to be the least liable to objection; but, as we have already said, we think it a subject for extensive counfideration.

To propose changes is ode matter, but to carry them out another. It is more difficult to know where to end then where to begin, and we recommand "Nevelie" to call in his pamphlet, and to spend a few years in maturing plans which are now crude in the extreme. Next week we propose to disto a little upon the proposed ranks of the other Officers.

THE most experienced Officers of the Reitish Army have long held the opinion, that it is essential to the support of strict discipline in our ranks, that the three grades of Officers, Serjeants, and rank and file, should be cept from the very alightest approach to familiarity. This is most effectually provided for in our system, as regards intercourse between the Commissioned and the Non-Commissioned Officers-by birth, hebits, distinct residence, and only official associations. The case, however, is sadly different between the grades of Serjeants, and the renk end file. They differ little in birth or habits, and from their generally reciding in the same room, their interseurse is not limited to matters of Military duty slone. We know, and have ourselves felt, how difficult, almost impossible, it is to live secluded amid a crowd: and, to preserve the distance, and respect for authority, between those who live in daily and hourly intercourse is almost impossible—for man has more of the social than the segregarious in his nature. We, on this ground, intrest the attention of the Military authorities to the great advantage, at a small cost, which would arise from granting Serjeants a separate, but adjacent room—separating them from close contact with the brivates, but not removing them from a near observation and watch over their conduct.

MANY private letters received by the last mail from India, are full of remarks on the hard treatment received by the 13th Light Infantry, in being kept in Scinde, after an Indian service of more than twenty years. It must be remembered that this regiment embarked direct for India in January, 1823-that it bore a large share in the hardchips, toils, and hard-fighting in Burmah—that it alone went through the whole of the Affghan war from first to last, ciways in the front of the fight, and always victorious. We sak, with its many friends at home and abroad, are all these great services to be mepaid by a detention at Sukker, in Scinde, the mortality at which station has hithesto been greater than at States Loone? It is said in India that this hardy regiment, there one thousand men, is worth any two thousand Entopleans to the Government that the soldiers are inured to war, and seasoned to the climates of India—that its services are of such value that even justice must be the price paid for them. Such, we trust, any not long be the measure dealt out to this gallant regiment; and we think we have good grounds for certing that instructions for the emberkation of the 13th Light Infantry have, by this time, reached Bombay.

"Where Bir Charles Napier, after one of his late brilliant victories in Scinden researched on the inclicioncy of sending Native regiments into action with a paneity of Officers, he pointed out a palpable defect in their construction, as unreasonable and hazardous as that of sending ships not properly meaned late a Naval engagement; and this incongruity is further corroborated in Lieutement Greenwood's recent publication. What with staff more than twelve or fourteen British Officers present with a Native corps, and perhaps not more than ten or twelve able for field service; considering the all-dependence of the Sepoys on their Buropean leaders, this number is unquestionably too few. It is not enough to excert that the system has done bitherto-why after it? Would it not be wheer, and more timely, to remedy the defect which is at present known to exist, then to try to defend it by the past? Several new corps are raised in Gweller, and each is to have three British Officers! Does this mend the matter? But report says that one additional Captain is to be given to every Native regiment. Does this arrangement, considering the extending state of our Indian possessions. to say nothing of the probable fate of the Panjaub, promiss sufficient officiancy of service or security to com mand, though it may increase patronage, without lowering the price of stock

It may be mentioned that there is a large budy of Officers on the Retired List, above four hundred and Afty Captains, Lieutennata, and Ensigns, who are not incapacitated by age from service, although they were obliged to leave it from ill-health; this dead weight in and will be increasing, unless some opening to esse it is made; it is probably no evaggeration to say that many of these have, by attention and long residence in this climate, recovered their health, and, relinquishing their pensions, would be both eager and able to re-enter on active service : and with a view to ascertain their efficiency. such as volunteared and were approved of should be required to pess medical inspection. There are, however, two obstacles which at present debar them from returning. to service :--first, an Act of Parliament prohibiting persons returning to India after an absence of five years ; and second, a resolution of the Directors precluding all Officers who are admitted pensioners on the Military Fund from returning to the Hervice. Without impugning the wisdom or necessity of these edicts, made towards the close of the last century, it may not be uninstructive to inquire whether or not they are usefully adapted in the present state of Indian effairs; and whether or not, combining complete efficiency, of service with sound economy, come measure might not emanate from the proper authorities by which the services of the above Officers might be made available in existing exigencies, without unjustly affecting the position of those who have been more fortunate in the retention of their health and appointments.

A COMMERPONDENT has inquired if there is any truth in a statement made in one of the Iudian Papers, "that the Prize property esptured at Hydershad, in Soinde, would be restored to the Ameers." We can assure our correspondent, that so far from this being true, the last accounts from India that we received were, that the guns, broken up, were daily expected in Bombay, to be recast into a triumphal pillar, and that the rest of the property had been either valued or sold, and that a very prompt distribution would be made of the prise-money. Sir Charlese Napier is not the man to see his gallant soldiers' just rights denied them.

A FORTION of the enrolled Pensioners will be called out on the 20th instant, to receive their clothing, arms, accountements, and allowances, for the previolen of a prescribed outfit. The day for celebrating Her Majosty's Birth has been very properly fixed on, and on that day the Queen will have under arms a veteran band of her loyal soldiers and subjects, who have dared the world in arms, and are now ready to keep their Sovereign's peace against all comers.

Normen definitive has transpired respecting the regiments which are to emberk this year for India; but we understand that two, at least, will be sent these direct, and that the 80th from New South Wales is under orders.

We have to acknowledge the receipt of several communications from Paymeeters and other Officers of the Army, all coughed in the most fintering terms, and thanking us for what we stated in our Gasette of the 6th instant in their behalf; and as we cannot find room for been half of these letters, we hope no offenes will be taken by our not further noticing them.

We have to correct an error in which we fell in the article alluded to, as we therein stated that the actual extra expense to the public of permitting an old Officer of thirty-five years' full-pay service (twenty-five of which as Paymaster), to retire on full-pay, would be only As. per diem, whereas it ought to have been Ss. fid., as supposing the successor to be a half-pay Captain at 7s., which, deducted from the 12s. 6d. (the pay of the new Paymenter), it leaves 5s. 6d.; and if the Officer is, of any other rank, the half-pay is to be accordingly deducted But, against this extra expense, it must be taken into consideration the saving of the said half-pay to the public for twenty five years, which in the case of a Lieut. amounts to £2053 2s. 6d.; and of a Captain to £3193 15s.; and we again repeat, that this is the only Staff situation in the whole Service where such half-pay is deducted; consequently, under any and every circumstance, the country is, and would be, a considerable gainer, and which is an irresistible argument in favour of allowing this old Veteran of thirty-five years' full-pay service the right of retiring, the same as all other Officers have after thirty years.

We think we have now said enough on this subject to ensure its immediate adoption, as we are aware that the present Secretary-at-War only required to have the case brought fully and fairly under his notice, in order to enable him to make up his mind as to the final measure, which he has had some time under consideration. Nor should we have at all entered on the matter, had it not been forcibly brought to our knowledge that Paymasters have no head whatever, such as the Commander-in-Chief for the Army, the Master-General for the Ordnance, and the Director-General for the Medical Department-all of whom are ever ready to advocate and procure justice for any grievence in their particular branches of the Service ; and this was most clearly manifested in the proceedings of the late Naval and Military Commission, before which no witness whatever was examined as to the situation or claims of Paymesters; indfed, their name was never even mentioned or alluded to; es, if the present just demand on their behalf had been brought before the Commission by any influential person, there is not the slightest doubt but that it would have been recommended, the same as was the retirement of all other old Officers.

We now leave the subject as we found it, in the hands of the Secretary-at-War.

As might have been auticipated, the claims of poor Mrs. Retson (the widow of a Berjeant of the old 94th) to the substantial manifestation of every soldier's aympathy. had only to be made known to be recognised. Had this truly high-hearted woman been someoted with the French Service, her breast would have been decorated with the cross, and her support through life secured by a liberal pension. With us, as far as collided intervention is concerned, she might look for her reward-in the workhouse.

At the tremendous hombardment of Matagorda in 1810. precisely four-and-thirty years from the present date, she won the admiration of General Graham's entire division, by the heroic exposure of her life, not through any wayward impulse of temper or temperament, but simply to secure the invaluable refreshment of sold water for the wounded in the casemates. She sought then no more solid acknowledgment of her deserts. What followed? At the conclusion of the war, and on her humband's douth, she was literally flung upon the world pentilless. She, however, with the native intropidity of her character, has struggled in allence with the severities of her fortune, and has made out a livelihood in the dreary vacation of an hospital nurse. The fine old woman is now in her seventy-second year, with all the woes and weaknesses of age to menace destitution. What a conclusion to the career of one whose name is inscribed in the glowing page of Napler's history ! For the honour of the Army this communication, it may fairly be hoped, is to be averted.

When the existence and condition of Mrs. Retson was made known through the press-in which good work we are found to have had our share—the speedy result was, that a committee of four General Officers was formed to promote and overlook the formation, by contribution, of a fund sufficient to purchase for her an annuity, equivalent to a small pension. The names of these Officers are, (it need scarcely be said.) Major-General Sir Archibald Muclaine (the honoured Captein of Matagorda), Lieut. General Sir Andrew Bernard, Lieptenant-General Sir John Mucdonald (Adjutant-General), and Major-General Hare, and they have liberally beaded the subscription list, which lies in the office of Mesers. Cox & Co., Craig's Court, and which has realised slove upon fifty pounds.

In justice to a generous Pear, it should be specially noted, that on the first appearance in Moure. Chambers's Journal of an account of Mrs. Retson's case, the Marquess of Lanadowas at once transmitted to Sectlend, for her wee, the sum of ten pounds.

Assuredly the Service has many a titled son, who has both the heart and the hand to umplate such an example! Every saldier, should, at thick a call, throw in his mite to secure for one who has so fairly won her Peninsular laurels, the shilling a day which may save her from the fate of a peuper, and save the Army itself from the reproach, which might be noted in some future edition of Napier, that this heroic woman had been wholly and beartlessly neplected by it and by her country.

WE have before us the official report of Admiral Dupetit Thouars, relative to the recent affairs at Tabitia document little inferior in length to the Message of an American President-which, however, the Admiral seems to consider hardly explanatory enough, as he has sent it home in charge of M. Reine, one of his Lieutenants, that he may talk it over. Our limits will not permit us to give this pièce justificative at length; we must, therefore, notice only a few of the leading points, thatsour readers may understand the line of argument taken up by the French Admiral. He goes back to the period of Mr. Camping's administration, when, as he save, the disputes among the natives of the island, heightened by the diffront views of the Missionaries, had become so serious, that the protection of the British Flag was loudly called for; the affair being referred to our Admiralty, the opinion was given, that the possession of these islands would be more ungrous than profitable to Great Beltain, and therefore Mr. Canning civilly declined the offer. This being the state of affairs, it was open to any other nation to assume the protectorate of these islands; consequently France was exercising her right in taking this unfortunate race under her wing; and the consequence was, the treaty of Seutember, 1842, into which Queen Pumbre entered with consent of her different chiefs.

All this had been arranged quite satisfactorily, and everything was going on smoothly until, at the Admiral expresses, "The troubles of Tahiti re-commenced at the arrival of the Talbot in January, 1843," when the series of intrigues by the English began, all in hostility to France, and were increased to a climax by the arrival of the Pindictive, which ship gast Mr. Pritchard on shore before she came to anchor herself. This Missionary Consul, or Consul Minsiopary, found the means of fomonting discontent; it was by his advice that her sable Majorty housted her flag, which the French Admiral calls a pasilion de fantaisie, and the Queen was kept in a state of likem by being told that it was the intention of the French Officer to turry her off the island. This pavilles de Jantaleis sceme to have been a dreadful eyesore to the Admiral, and even to have baunted his dreams. When the Queen went on board the British ship, this dreadful fing was threstened to be heisted, but the calemity see sverted; and Captain Toup Nicolas sent sailors on shore to construct a flag-staff whereon it was to be displayed it was, in fact, so unbearable an aunoyance, that notice was sent that, if this flag was not atruck on a certain day, the island would be accupied by French troops; which threat was carried futo execution, and was the steam why Depotit Thouses was repalled

We recommend the following passage of the Admiral's despatch to the notice of the Missionary Society: -"The Missionaries, who, as all the world knows, are choses from the very sleeps of spicy in Loudon, and taken from labourers, such as blacksmiths, carpenters, and others of the same class, not being sufficiently sulightened to make good laws, capable of verying as the base of well organised society, acknowledged their incapanity-

In the sketch given last week of the principles under which may be conducted the general duties of a regiment composed of more than one testalion, the general outlips only was attempted; much more than which, how-ever, would be necessary to explain theroughly the work-ing system to most British Officers—so entirely authors e line is any other system than that of the single battalion.

The battalions parade together, the basiness of the general parade being under the orders of the Lieutenant-Colonel, or the Senior Officer of the regiment upon the parade. When the Serjeants take up the points for forming the column, under the direction of the Sentor Adjutant, the Serjeant of the leading company of the second bettalion, if the right be in front, must take, in addition to the front of his company, the six puess' interval be-tween the battalians. The Lieutenant-Colonel, or the Senior Officer of the regiment on parada, gives his general orders, as the Brigadier to his Brigade, which are repeated, as laid down in Part IV, of the Drill Regulations, by the Commanders of bettalions. The Lieutenant Co orders the reports to be collected, each battalion Com mander repeats the order to his own Adjutant, who collesis the reports of his battalion, and reports to his own Chief; the Mejors then report each his own battalion to the Lieutenant-Colonel. When the regiment is strong snough on the parade, it should drill us a brigade; but when weak in numbers, the battalions may be consolidated to make one battalion of six, or eight, or ten divisions, as the Lieutenant-Colonel may direct. But it is very desira-ble that the regiment should very frequently be exercised in brigade, regularly formed, with its two battalious.

The band belongs to the whole regiment. In marching, it is at the head of the leading battalion. In marching past the General on parade, all the drums of both battaions are with the band at the head of the regiment. line the band is in rear of the centre of the first battalion; the Drummers are in the rear of their own battalions, as laid down in the Dill-book. The Pioneers of the whole regiment will be at the head of the column, in line; if the riment be alone, they will be on the right of the line; if brigaded with other troops, the Pioncers will be in rear of the releurs.

The colours, if there be but two battallons in the regiment, will be in the centre of the first battalion; if there should be three battalions in the regiment, the colours should be in the centre of the whole, that is, with the second battaliou.

There is no doubt, as already stated, a strong feeling exists in the Army against forming regiments of more than one battation. Much of this feeling arrays from the novelty of the thing, and the absence of any working model in the Service, by which the system can be practi-cally understood. To judge by the Army List, some such thing exists is the Foot Guards; but the Army generally may be said to know less of the organisation of the Poot Guards, than of the French or Prussian Armies. Officers of the regiments in which the experiment has been tried, exclaimed, "How inconveniently large the mess will become," Sirretting that the most of the regiment of ten aring the war, or serving in India, where each company had its Captain, two Lieutenants, and Ensign, was stronger; and so far from such mesers being found inconveniently large, the cry at the reduction of the Army was, "How can so few support a good mess?"

The bettalion system is certainly ennomical; more eldiers are brought into the field with fewer Officers, and yet there is a sufficiency of these. The principal adtage, however, of the system is the greater intimecy which it will give the Officers with the movements and management of bodies of troops more numerous than a single ment of bodies of treope more numerous than a single bettallon. In every instance, except one, the regiments selected for the experiment were kept together; but the rule wise first broken through in the case of the 45th, one buttallon having been sent to the Cape of Good Hope, and the other to Gibraltar; and again, in the regiments sent repently from America to the West Indies. This separation of these bettalions deprives the system of every men't perturbing to it. erit pert

The main defect in the organisation of the regiments of 12 companies lies, in the Commanding Officer of the regiment feing made—b retain the immediate someoned of the first battalion tolerhich particularly, in someones, he is supposed to being. The regimental Staff about be held to be as independent of the battalions as it is in the regiments of the companies. The regiment being required to detacle a part, or the whole of a battalion, the first battalion should be as liable to furnish the deachment, or he detached, as the second.

In a regiment of 10 companies, no particular company is invariably attached to the head-quarters of the regiment, neither abould my particular battalion in a regiment composed of more than one. The Lieutenast-Colonel, the regimental Staff, the offcurs and band, constitute the head-quarters of the regiment; it is a matter of indifference what buttalion, or furtion of a battalion, be retained with the head-quarters. This is the principle of the French Army, where the system of regiments consisting of more than one battalion is that of the Service, and consequently is well understood. is well understood.

To the well-working of the system, it is essential above all things that the Majers should know that the com-mand of their bettalions a similar to the Captains' com-mand of their companies, and that they hold no power mand of their companies, and that they note no power independent of the Commanding Officer of the regiment, but that any power of awarding punishment, or granting minor indulgences they say have, they derive from the Licutenant-Colonel, as the Captain holds his by delegation from his immediate Commander. The Licutenant-Colonel's command of his regiment must be complete in every respect.

The Electric Telegraphi.—This is a very ingenious contrivence or invention of Er. Bein, by means of which communication can be madrialmost instantaneously at a distance of many miles from one terminus to another. A sheet or plate of sinc is placed at one terminus, and a sheet or plate of copper stemither: the connexion between them is by a coppar wire. A roltaic battery is thus created, the electric currents being produced by the earth and this simple apparatus. The currents are constant, the variasheen is by a copper wire. A Politale battery is thus created, the electric currents being penduced by the earth and this simple apparatus. The currents are constant, the variation during 16 months heing found to be very amell. The machanical part of the apparatus consists of a clock at each ferminus, with an index and figures amelied on a circular fisto from 1 to 2; these figures point dut certain letters, or words, or aentenses, in a recability, and by these means intelligence of various events can be communicated from one terminus to another. The electric fluid operates hipon these clocks so as to step the lighest at the registed figures; the clocks themselves being put and kept, in section by weights. There also some other minutes and mare delicate datalis in the constraint from of these engines, by means of which the neduciny is better secured than in former inventions, and there is a contrivance by means of which the numbers are printed, without loss of time, on a paper attached to a sylinder of dram. The telegraph has been at work at the terminus of the South Western Railway for several days, the plate of sinc being at Nine Rims, and the plate of cappals at Wimbiedon—a distance of all miles. The results had a course by which it is accomplished. Mr. Bein has proved highly untilefactory, and established the rapidity and accuracy of communication, and the simplicity of the means by which it is accomplished. Mr. Bein has proved himself a most inginious inventor of a very notel and influencious learnment.

Such are H. B.'s four last sketches; the portraits are generally good and the satire excellent, particularly No. 799— "He would be a Recruit"—the Military aspirant being. Brougham, and the Serjeant the Iron Duke. The Noble Lord's constitutional objection to "those ville guns" Lord's constitutional objection to "those vile guns" would seem at first to make his desire to enlist somewhat undatiful; but the difficulty vanishes when we recollect that is observed and the might say) in enlistment, is the receipt of a shilling—a small sain, to be care, but then there is a proverb about dogs and pudding, to which we need not now slinds. It will be seen further, that, in another respect, his thirst for glory is not altogether disinterested. "If I enlist with you downright, will you promise to make me a General?"—is his question to the Serjeant; no promise, however, can be extract from the wary old soldier, beyond that of ultimate promotion to the digality of Drum-Major—one who contrives to make a good deal of noise out of emptinear—and that, too, contingent on his esseing to "jump from side to side?" and learning to march " in a straight forward manner."

Mr. W. Farris.—It is with great pleasure we call attention to the antice that this distinguished comedian has so far recovered from his alarming illness as to be able to resume his pressional duties.

Mr. Otway contreceous next week, at the Marylebone theatre, a succession of characters from Shakespeare' plays. As a Tragellan, Mr. Otway is almost with rival; and we hope ere long to see him this rightion—one of the stars of theagreat theatres.

Chatham, April 23.—Yesterday afternoon very con-siderable interest prevailed in Chatham Garrison, owing to the arrival of a detachment of this regiment, owing to the arrival of a detachment of this regiment, consisting of one Serjannt-Major, one Serjannt, and 18 privates, under the summand of Capt. Wen. Evans, being the released prisoners who had been taken at Cabool in January, 1841, by the Afghanistans during the retreat of the British forces in the late war. These troops embarked at Calcutta on the 4th of December last, on board the ship the Duke of Cornwall, Capt. Eyles, and after a very favourable passage of 138 days, they arrived off Gravesend on Saturday afternoon, the 20th instant. The whole of the men are wounded two of them have The whole of the men are wounded, two of them have balls in their bodies, cansing them at intervals very considerable pain. Two women and one child, with a private of the 49th and one private of the 3d Dragoon Guards, came with them. The 44th bet one man the second day after they had sailed, who died of cholers. Dr. Flemming, from one of the Native corps, had the above soldiers in charge. These troops were under the command of Major-General G. Pollock, C.B., and were released in the month of September, 1842, and miraculously escaped being again taken prisoners during their march through the Arghunder Pass, by the enemy, by the fortunate advance of our troops, which had been expressly forwarded for their eafety by Major-General Sir R. Sale. The men state, no one can imagine the hardships they have endured during the last part of their Military cureer. The majority of these soldiers have been in India upwards of its years. They have joined the Military Invalid Depot at Brompton, and will shortly undergo medical inspection, previous to their being pensioned.

To the Edilor of the Noval and Military Suzette.

Sin,—in a recont Number of your excellent Gazette, you mentioned that the bett. of Royal Marines serving in Ireland was to be concentrated at Spike, and spoke of that miserable Islet (only one mile in discumference that miserable Islet (only one mile in droumference) as being admirably adepted for all the purposes of disciplining a large body of troops such as the batt. Is. Allow me, Siz, to inform you that there is not, on the whole island, aufficient space on which to drill one handred men, much less sight handred, of which the batt. Is composed; neither in there harrack accommedation for one half the latter number. The fortree, which atmos in the centre, on an artificial eminence, occupies, with its giasis, a very considerable portion (its parade ground has never been levelled, the works having been suspected as the pilote, before they were half fluished), and the remainder, which is extremely rough, rocky, and irregular, is let out by is extremely rough, rocky, and irregular, is let out by is extremely rough, rooky, and frequely, is let out by the Government to affew poor ficherment shift their fami-lies, the only inhabitants on the island. But want of space, although of itself a peramount objection, is not the only disadvantage which Spike, as a Military post, pre-sents a life isolated situation, and preserving intersecure in the winter account with the main, are highly suffavourable to the comfort of the troops, and, contingually; to disci-pline; for the easy, being these out of from all their wented enjoyments and recognitions, become, after a lapse of time, pline; for the sea, some thus cut on reme an event enjoyments and reinputions, become, after a lapse of time, sullen and disself-fiel; there are of source no heats at their dispeas, which thay choose to pay exploitantly for them, and the ferry being a mile or upwards across, the indulgence of leave is necessarily restricted, from the danger consequent on returning "balf seas over" at danger concequent on returning "balf sees over" at hight. The centeen, then, is their only recourse, and to it, of an evening, they materally recort, to dissipate in bad whisky (nothing good is ever got at a cantem) the icksome lathesmen, and painful same that are induced by rambling idly all day among the rains and rubbish of

Spike, Sir, is a quarter which every regiment in the Cork district avoids if it can, and it is such a wretched place that no depot or detachment of the Line is ever kept them mere than two or three months. This, then, being the case, I maintain that it is an act of injustice to the Marines to imprison them there so long. If, as it is said, their services cannot by dispessed with in the country just now, those services are lost at Spike, where a Concept's country of six many the services are lost at Spike, where a try just now, those services are lost at Spike, where a Corporal's guard of six man only is required to do all the duty of the island. Would not the batt., in the event of its being wanted for Foreign Service, be equally grailable, if located at any of the many eligible Military stations along the Western coust, where the men, while savantageously employed, might be drilled and disciplined, and where they would not suffer, as they now do, such privations as those to which I have alluded, and which, I have fast annually and complete of hitsely? esure you, they feel soutely, and complain of bitterly?

58th and Prov. Batt .-- A detachment of 2 Subs. and 50 men emberked at Deptford on the 22d April, on board the Barcesa convict-ship, for Van Diemen's Land, 61st—At the Querter Sessions Court, Limerlok, on Thursday se'snight, Liout.-Col. Burnside instituted a process against the Limerick Gas Company, to rebover 91.-42. 6d. for loss and damage sustained in consequence of a valuable charger being injured through the neglect of the Company, in leaving the road leading from the Crescent to the Barracks in an unfinished state, when laying down the gas-pipes last winter. It appeared in evidence that the Colonel was returning to the Berracks after visiting the Guards, walking his horse, when his fore-feet sank into a cut left unfinished on the road, whereby the horse fell and cut his knees, and throw the Colonel over his head. The injury was clearly proved, and the Barrister pronounced his decree for the full amount on the civil bill. The Gas Company intend to appeal to the Assizes.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL ROBERT SIMBON, E.H.
THIS gellent Officer, who had held the appointment of Town-Major of Hall, as reward for distinguished services, for upwards of 20 years, died at his quarters in the citadel on the 12th inst, in the 61st year of his age. He entered the service of his country at an early period of the present century, as an Ensign in the 81st Reg., and with which he first did duty in Sicily in 1805. Subsection quantly ha obtained a Licutensury in the 43d Light infantry, then forming, with the 52d and 95th Riffes, a crask brigade, under his relative and patron, General Sir cresti trigade, under his relative and patron, General Sir John Maare, at Thorneliffe, on the coast of Kant. In 1807 Liket. Signon embarked with his regiment at Deal, in the aspedition under the late Lord Catheart, against Consabages, and was present at Sir Arthur Wellesley's gallest affair, in the Island of Kiege. In the fullowing year Lieut. Simeon was again affect with a force under the orders of Sir John Moore; but on their arrival at Guttanburgh, it being found that their services would be unavailing, the expedition was ordered to Pertugal. From this period he was identified with the fortune of Sir John Moore, in his advance on the Smanish frontier, and subthis period he was identified with the fortune of Sir John Moore, in his advance on the Spanish frontier, and subsequent disserted retreat. Capt. Simesa next served through a seasiferable portion of the Peninsula campaign, man present at the battle of Vittoria, and at the last fight haders. Displaces. On the preliminarity of peece being algaed, the 45d, and other regiments of the light division, were architect to America, where they took part in the war of seption for the outropic committed in Canada.

At the attack on New Orleans, Capt. Simeon, healing the storming party against the principal redoubt of the enemy's position, was thrown into the treach by a spund shot, causing the severe would which resulted in the amputation of his left leg and thigh, and rendered him unfit for further active duties. He then retired with the unfit for further active duties. He then retired with the rank of his jor, but afterwards received his Staff Appointment, and the Brevet of Liest. Colosal, with the Hanoverian Guelphio Order, as an acknowledgment of his services. The funeral of the gallant Officer pock place as the 16th, and there have been few econsists of this description in Hull where the public feeling and sympathy have been so carnestly enlisted. Thousands of persons attended the coremonial. Almost every window in the loss line of procession was economic; many mersons were long line of procession was occupied; many persons were congregated on the roofs of houses, and nearly the whole of the shope were wholly or partially closed.

The King of Fortugal, by a decree dated 1st July, 1818, and published in an order of the day of 28th March, 1808, granted the decoration of a crusa to any Officer, of whatever rank, who had been effective with his Corps to the field during the nix companies of 1899, 1819, 1811, 1812, 1813, and 1814. The ensured have the words "Guerra Postmentor" within a wreath on the chryste; and on the reverse, a figure denoting the number of conspaints to the families of Officera, but only to be worn by the individual to whom they were originally granted. By the figulations, only Officer who was effective for any two or three of the sharementoned campaigns, received a silver cruss; for four as more, a gold cross; to be worn in each case on the left break, suspended by a ribbon of the nestional Portuganess actions—did and blue. A sliver cross was also bestowed on the most unamplary of the Non-commissioned Officers and soldiers.

When Serjeants' wives armaloprived of this indulgence, it allows the Corporale and privates who are married to have a much greater income than the Serjeant, who has much more to keep up in clothing, rank, So. The men's washing belongs to the interior evonomy of the troop or company, and of course is, or should of the troop or company, and of course is, or should be, regulated by the l'optain; and we never heard of the Commanding Officer of a regiment policring about with such mutters, that is to say, as regards the apportioning of it. We must add, however, that should a soldier consider himself aggriced by his wife being deprived of he proportion of the company's mushing, he may complain to the Commanding Officer on the subject.

As regards the presumed "right" of soldiers' wives to live in barack, this Correspondent has a most erroneous impression; for soldiers wives of every description are only permitted to reside in baracke. "as an indulgence when it does not interfere with the comfort and convenience of the com."

Naval & Military Cazette,

8ATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1844.

THE excitement in the Army and Navyselt on the pro-posed motion of Sir A. L. Hay has not subsided, but changed into indignation, only kept down to the pressure of discipling. At the present moment of the irritation, we may without shrinking from our addition. or yielding one point to those who advocate repudiation of the national debt of gratitude, too long due to d Army and Navy, throw a new light upon the cause of ti opposition evinced to the motion. The following extrac would induce us to balleve that the Duke of Wellington during and at the close of the Peninsular War, was strong opposed in his wishes for extending, in cases of gree merit, to all ranks the grant of Madais, suffi of the Orde of the Bath. Is it not possible that his having been the so ungraciously refused, and his strongly stated opinion slighted, that he may be very unwilling to ask now for general distinction for his Army, when he was refuse the favour he at the time only asked for those who has conspicuously distinguished themselves in action? May there not also be a still more influential opposition in high quarters to the measure, in the reflection that no having conferred at the close of the war extended honour at the solicitation of the Dike of Wellington himself, if would be unseemly to grant at the address of the House of Commons, now at the sleventh hour, a distinction to all survivors, which had been denied at the wish of their Commander to the comparatively few of all ranks who governed had personally and super-eminently distinguished themselves under him ? These extracts speak plainly :-

"My opinion has always been that Medals should have tranted for important actions only, and to those engage anted for important actions only, and to those engaged in om in a crosspicuous manner, wholever might be their rank to r Service.".... Dispotch, 15th July, 1811.

"I contess that I do not shearer in the limitation of the Order of the Bath to Field Officers. "Many Captains in the Agny conduct themselves in a vary meripolicus manner, and delervelt; and I never could see the reason for exclusing them wither month the Order or from the Modal."—Bispatch, 28th June, 1815.

We cannot pass unnoticed au admirable leading diele in the Times" of last week That most influential fourful took a most just and plan view of this apject, and by opening its adjumes to various cor spondents on Military Distinctions, has merited the thunks of the Army and Nay. Nor has the Geekly press been silent. The "Speciator" treats the subject itself fairly, but the move of the address, as we think, rather unfairly. The "Ancetator" thus writes:—
"It is the carnest prayer of SP A. L. Hay, that Her Natically should confer an "homorand distinction on the care jesty should confer an jesty should confer an 'honoraly distinction on the sur-viving Officers of the Peniusular Army.' Does for Arrdrew mean that they have deserved it by outliving their brave composes in arms I or is the anxious to bring down the veterans of the Peninsular War to a level with the order-bedisened Spanish Leginists?"

"This very question of time—the chief ground relied on by the Secretary-at-War—to what does it amount? "We cannot give the rewards now; because the opportunity has gone by, of athors ramain. There are anniversaries, birthdays, times peon-hasty commemorative of tone only or surve of the great and distinguishing events of the war, which might be well taken for the occasion. It was only in 1slp that the Emperor of Russia erected the monument at Burrouno, which commemorates the erected the monument at Burrouno, which commemorates the great dampaign which was cotymporary with this very Ponineum War, and which was cotymporary with the very Ponineum that the reaching of the monument; is similar opportunity might doubtless be found in this Penindular gas also."

"Of this war—one of the low modern wars which either has afforded material for history, of found an hierorian worthy of commemorating it—of this way and this only, it has been truly written at the chose, "Thus the war terminated, and with it all remembrance of the voturish's a vicioes."

Aud again :--

And again :—

"Yet suching records this. We correct correctves—no national act records this; the great work of Colonel Narian down independent the state of the second treatment of no as independent in the price of the second in the second in the second in the second testimonial to the victors."

"We confess that is our opidion the only result of the late debate has been to show the wakness of the setmeide reasons which prevent a sational commonship of the great services of the Peninaular veterous, is a manner and span a scale worthy of the occasion; and we can, therefore, only regret that the matter has been spentioned at all. Had it been registed on benefic of time veterons on the ground that the measure would place their achievements on a level with the comparatively petry compagned achievements on a level with the comparatively petry compagned phe introduction of the questions.

As we haid in a previous Namber, we would have pre-ferred that the motion about have immided the survivor of the war commencing in 1233 and ending in 1232; but as the major contains the indice, we of course supported the minor proposition, with his hope of finally seeing the major one assented to by all parties.

Having found fault will the opening paragraph of the "Specialor," we must fin justice incurrent the concluding one for it well are in the confidence of the state the "Specialor," we mustrin justice inhaumend the con-cluding does for it well stages our long-formed opinions on a matter of great national importance :—.

"A standing Army is a necessary part of the organization of civil society of the modern Recopens type. A high-sprited soldery—an Army is which such individual is encouraged to be proud of his profession, and ambitions of parasant reputation—in the only rate one. An embatased sense of honour, though as instequate defence against specific lagues from virtue, is good as a preservative from habitud crime. By encouraging emulation among the men, you raise the character of the regiment; by encouraging emulation among the regiments, you raise the character of the Army. By making regimental and personal decurations attainable by all tasks—by offering them for every different kind of hillstary virtue—by making them not too easy of attain ment—you will best render them conductes to the only end which renders them valuable."

We will conclude for this week with a letter from a distinguished veteran, and most powerful correspondent.

To the Editor of the Bosel and Military Gasette.

Bits.—The Government of which the Duke of Wellingtin is the real although not the cereasible head, has, after sundry side-wind shirks and quirks, with the most hardened effrontery at length ranged itself openly in opposition to the urgent prayer of its PARENTE, not to be entirely buried like. We use the term distinctly. The these can be likely alive! We use the term divisedly, for there can be little doubt that of the new-forgetten Peninsular Army they were born, and but for that Army ne such Duke or Government would at this moment have been in existence; if that peerless Army (for England, after her treatment of it, can never expect the same unparalleled devotion from any other), had quaited or falled in the Herculean task imposed upon it, there would have been no Waterloo; and in all probability England would now have been a tributary state, or governed from the Presidential chair. The cannibal custom of devouring an aged father, is a mole hill compared with this mountain of filial baseness and ingratitude; and we desire no stronger proof of our often assumed position, that a great head and a heart situated in the right place, or even of human mould, are not always or ment parts of one and the same individual. Would this ave occurred, we ask, if any other soldier in existence (possessing equal power with the noble Duke), had been at the head of the British Army? Would it have happened If that great man, who by fostering and encouraging the noble makness (if weakness it is) of the true and genuine soldier, rhich causes him to place a higher value upon the fruits than upon the money-bag of his own personal daring, honorary distinctions, cheap reward of nations," than upon the mon wares of pay and promotion, and who has done more towards restoring a healthy tone and feeling not only in the Native Army of India, but in the British Army at large, than any other man now in exist-ence, had been either the real or ostensible chief of the Government of England? We say no. He would have cut off his right hand, rather than have thus destroyed almost the very has hope of the Peninsular voteran, by a heartless organised Government Opposition to his forced appeal, from a Chief who had forgotten them in his own greatness, to the vaunted justice and generosity of a British House of Commons. The Duke has now the most indeputable claim to be considered the greatest General that ever existed, for having conquered the French Army; he has ended his Milltary career by conquering his own, and we have no doubt that posterity will give him the full benefit of this, his last exploit.

We trust, however, that although now beaten back, they are not utterly incapable of a rally; their leaders, we hope, are not disabled, but have oaly retired to " inde their time." The question is one that not only concerns the veteran, but she British Army at large. If, amidst this modern shower of honours, not a splittry cross or medal is to fall to the share of the survisors of the most momentous atruggle that this country was ever engaged in; if the reast of the young Asialic soldier is to sparkle with sonours, whilst that of the old Spanish veteran remains naked and unadorned, upon any other than the only intelligible principle which has been brought forward on the pregible passesper whom has seen cropped or control of seen comparison, that the fame he has acquired renders all ex-leting distinctions unworthy of his acceptance; and that the overlant honour that can be paid to him is, "to leave isting againstable newtray of his acceptance; and that the greatest honeur that can be paid to him is, "to leave thim alone with his glory;" the Peace War-Orders become mere dross and rubbish—a piece of black ribbon, self-placed upon the breast of the Peninsular veteran, would be a more honourable badge, in the estimation of the true soldier, than the Order of the Bath, or even that of the Garter, under the same spread and management.

We have always given the present Secretary-at-War credit for a strong feeling in behalf of the veteran soldier; we insight to find that upon this occasion he has not sould up to our expectations. He has taken up a line acres up to our expectations. The has taken up a line unsupported by any one single argument of the slightent weight or ralidity; it would have been for better for his own repetation, and we should have had an infinitely higher opision both of his beart and intellect, if he had higher opision both of his heart and insurer, it me mu-nald it at enco--- The Dake has already declared that there shall be no Peninsular Order—he says so still—and there shall be no f the name aninion, or he may send It must therefore be of the same spinion, or he may send has bask to my regiment; "gre should then have better understood the mossesty which sewyed one of the most distinguished soldiers of the day, not only against the opinion of the Army, but against that of England and the worlds Oh, that all great man would remember advise of honest Clandise, "Ner Hit quie licest, any guid fecine despit, Outwest; mentemps demot respectus habest!."

If men in high places were to look not only to the extent of their power, but to that made of employing it which of their por would bear reflection, the great would be more beloved would us respected, and the powerless more happy; the word conqueror would bring other associations with it, than stern and unrelenting obdurney, and a heartless disregard of those feelings and intere to which involve the regard of those revings and interests which involve the necessity of admitting even a mistake. Superior genius encased in iron, is not, in our epinions, sufficient of itself to "overleap the brief span of life, and to consecrate the name of its possessor to a desirable immortality." It er, combined with virtue, alone to stamp belongs to VS with that god-like fame which lives for ever in th hearts of the human race at large; and it is this description of fame which we could wis h the Duke of Wellington to leave behind him-not that of the sword of his sou alone, which he could only hope to enjoy with others, wh have need it equally as well, perhaps, although not altogether to so good a purpose. O'HALLORAN. Limerick, April 24.

P.S. We are tempted to sak, Where was Young England?

—little Benjamin & Co.? When Old England proved herself so utterly undeserving not only of "that bubble, fame," but of the solid pudding she acquired by the gullantry and devotion of that Army and Navy, which left at her free disposal, at the conclusion of the war, "the parcelling out of the world," could not one single stone be found to east at the head of the cold-blooded men who were thus deliberately branding their country with the most heartless ingratitude? Were the representatives of Young England's chivalry, crowing, grunting, or braying? or had they purposely adjourned to the more comfortable discussion of a segar, and some half-dozen tumblers of brandy and water, whilst their seniors were so creditably employed in impaling the old vateran alive. We feer it may be said of them, that which was said of better men—

The age of our fathers, which was worse than our own, produced us, who are shortly to raise a progeny worse then ourselves. We shall be, however, glad to find ourselves mistaken.

It is our painful duty to record the deaths of two highly-distinguished Flag-Officers during the past week. Vice-Adm. Sir Jahleel Brenton, Bart., K.C.B., and Rear-Admiral the Hon. Frederick Paul Irby, C.B. (see Memoirs); the former at §Leamington, on the 21st, and the latter at Boyland Hall, Norfolk, off the 24th. Both these Officers signalised themselves greatly in their country's service, and their public deeds are imperishably recorded in history, while the remembrance of their private worth will long be cherished in the hearts of all to whom they were known, much more in those of their bereaved relatives and friends.

With peculiar pleasurk we record the nomination of Captain Robert Maussell, C.B., to the Commissionership of Greenwich Hospital, vacuat by the resignation of Edward Hawke Locker, Esq. The selection, wholly nosolicited on the part of the gallant Captain, does apnoun to the impartiality and discernment of Sir Robert Peol, with whom the patronage rested. Were our country involved in difficulties requiring the abilities of Captain Mannell on the ocean, we doubt not that he would have declined the saug berth, had it offered itself; but the contrary being the case, we know of no employment better suited to his teleats and character for urbanity. To watch over the welfare of the funds of that noble justifution, which protects the hardy tar in his days of decrepitude and helplessness, is an employment truly worthy the Naval Officer; and no feel that Captain Maunsell's appointment will be halled with satisfacton by sallors, young and old, whether in the retirement of Greenwich, or still braving the perils of the desp.

We samen a letter that has reached us on this subject :--To the Reliev of the Same and Hillery Cases.

Sin,...The whole Nuvel Service have heard with pleasure of the appointment of Capt. Mannesit, C.S., to the vacant Commissionership of Greenwish Hospital, and fully appreciate the justice done to the Service by Sir Robert Peel on this occasion, by plicing a Naval man in a situation which ought so evidently to heleng to the profession. I beg to suggest that he should complete the good work, by removing Mr. Tierway and Mr. Hope from the other two Commissionerships, and substituting two Naval Officers for those gentlemen, who, if they had my public spirit, would not continue to hold them after this marked expression of the Prime Minister's opinion on the subject. I observe that sivilians never get into Cheleen, or the Herse Guards?

MALLON.

Our attention has been invited to the comport Officers promoted from the Coast Guard Service to the rank of Commenders of the Royal Navy, as a reward for great real in the protection of Her Majesty's revenue, whilst in discharge of their duties as Lieutements in sommand of cruisers on stations; and our advocacy has been apposled to in their behalf, with the view to the appointments of these Officers to the command of Coast Guard districts.

As Officers of tried merit, well achoeled in the discipline of the Coast Guard Service, fully understanding its object, its instructions, and its ramifications, and scalously disposed to devote their best energies in the discharge of its duties, there can be little doubt that these bring with them the most essential requisites, and meet ample qualifications; and so tried Officers who kave distinguished themselves during a probably longthened service, under trials of no ordinary severity, their claims are strong, and they deserve much consideration from the Admiralty.

We are given to understand, that their efforts to abtain appointments as Inspecting Commanders of districts are, for the most pert, unsuccessful; and they find themselves, instead of being benefited by the promotion their exertions have procured for them, frequently great losers through the want of employment and its empluments.

On a former occasion we offered some remarks on the subject of reserving these appointments for Officers who, having once held them, had established a claim for a account term of command, by the seal and ability with which they had discharged their duties. But we are quite as unwifling now as we then expressed correlves, to admit that advantageous and scarce appointments such as these, should become too much, as a matter of course, the sanctioned expectancy of experienced Officers only, and we feel compalled to adhere to our former opinion, that no just idea can be formed of the sapabilities of other Officers, until they had been placed in the same position, and afforded a similar opportunity of displaying their abilities.

The recent regulation granting premotion to three Lieutenunts from the Coast Guard Service, instead of one annually, tends to increase very considerably the number of Commanders who become candidates for re-employment in this service, and it is obvious that if the Admiraity were to appoint three of three Officers during each year, to vacancies as they take place in districts, the patronage of the First Lord would be very materially diminished; although a safer policy may be exercised by securing a continuance of sealous and faithful conduct, we suspect his Lordship would not be brought very easily to adopt any practice as a general rule, whereby appointments at ence lucrative and advantageous would become too much a monopoly for a few. The liberal rate of pay and allowances renders them highly desirable, and the employment on shore is a very material point with those candidates who are married men, and have every disposition to continue at home with their families, and to avoid the expensive outlay inseparable from appointments abroad or affast.

We are not prepared to agree with some of our correspondents, in reference to the age of Officers, that if Inspecting Commanders can still usuage their horses, sign their names in red ink, and fill the President's chair at a Court of Inquiry, they possess every requisite, for their office. On the contrary, we are happy to observe that the more recent appointments have been the means of introducing a younger class of Officers, from whose seal we look for good and satisfactory results.

In a contemporary Journal it has been stated, that neither regiments nor detaphysents would be sent to India, this year. We have the best authority for stating that more than one regiment, and very many detachments for regiments there, will emberk for India this year. The 80th will certainly proceed there from New South Weles.

Sim HENRY POTTINGES, we understand, may be expected to arrive in this country in June, when, there seems to exist little doubt, neuro special mark of Her Mujesty's facour, and of the nation's gratitude, for his invaluable services in China, will be designed on him.

The protracted service abroad of the 55th Regiment cannot be userotised at the Horse Guards, and there must exist difficulties in the way of its relief, with which neither we nor the public can be acquainted. It is too true that the 26th Regiment was ordered home in mistake, but we are quite assured that the 55th will not be needlessly retained abroad; and that the very mistake having been made, would render the authorities the more auxious to remove the hardships inflicted on the 55th. This regiment left England in 1831—and the 26th only in 1828—yet the latter same from China last year, while the 55th is still serving there. A harder case this, almost, than that of the 15th, which we noticed last week.

It is with great satisfaction we state that the appearance and efficiency of the pensioners, enrolled on the 25th instant, more than equalled the general expectation. Their steady and soher conduct merits notice size, for all accounts agree that in very faw cases were man rejected from intemperance. We agreeted to observe that neither arms, accountrements, or clothing had been issued generally. In almost every district the punioners period in their working-clothes. We would suggest that, at agreenly period, the pensioners should be called out for training; and if for six consecutive days, this the five year, the local companies would be better able to recover their drill, and be some effective, than if called out at long intervals.

We published in our last a list of subscribers to the "Hardy Tostimonial;" and, considering the shortness of time clapsed since it was first talked of, we think we may congratulate the originators upon the success of their endeavours so far. Much, however, remains to be done. The Hardy Testimonal should not only be completed—it should be carried out in a way marking at once the high character of the man, and the esteem which, by his noble and generous bearing, he wen from the Navy, and also from the County of Dorset.

Few, but those intimately acquainted with the late Sir Thomas Hardy, can be competent to speak to his modesty and amiability. Each he been disposed to trumpet forth to the world the friendship which subsisted for years between the immortal Nelson and hisself—had he claimed the notice of the powerful upon the plan—the world might have listened, and iferdy, though not a greater, might have been a prouder mae. But he chose the uncatentatious course, and never in any one instance obtruded his claims upon the country. His rewards were uncought, at least by himself; and yet, by the sure progress which true worth almost invariably makes, he attained to one of the most honourable positions to which a Naval Officer can aspine. And shall his name be forgotten? Shall Hardy be unknown to the respectent ges? We trust not. We call upon the measurates, shipmates, and upon all admitgrs of sterling virtue, whather in or out of the County of Jorset, to contribute their aid to the desirable object of erecting a testimonial to the friend of the immortal Nelson—to the recipient of the dying embrace of England's greatest Naval benefactor—and to an honest man.

THAT Queen's Regiments are wented at all to make tain the Severeign authority in India, is the perfect conviction that the Native Army without this appul would not be adequate to accomplish all its varied datiss. It is not that fluidostan is incapable of producing more men for the Military Service, but that without a certain infesion of European stamins of men, as well as of Officers, the Indian Army would be incomplete in its organisation. The Hindon is a docile, faithful, and confiding being a next in devotion to the idol of his worship, is his loyalty to his Government and his obedience to his appriors a and the soldier of India looks up to his Seropean Officer as to one of higher moral and physical powers than himself—as if "bedged round with that divinity" Shakspears tells us was of yors supposed to form the halo of kings.

The European lorce is, therefore, the model, and in difficulty and danger the beacon; sud, the necessity of their presence admitted, let us new again counider the subject of the long detention in India of regiments sent out to perform such important functions. Unhappily, whatever subject we select from that quagter, resolves itself into a money question. In all the events which have occurred in India to disturb our rule or shake the faith of the itinito, hay, even of the European Officers themselves, we tree a sordid genus behind, the screen, iss withering hand stratched forth to curtail sembiushed indulgences, or bergaining with the soldier for the "lowest figure" at which they can obtain his services in a deadly climate, separated from his family, who under wounds or sickness would have been his solace, the teeming Treasury having higher duties to recompense than issuing twopense-halipenny a week for the support of the soldier's family during the period he shall be wasting away his vigour in the marshes of Scinde. Money is the ruling passion, and the detention of our regiments in India has no other origin; they cost no more than the Native regiments, when there; but then a voice from Leadenhall Street exclaims, "Look at the expense of the transport: how can we afford to send your regiments back again in less than 20 years?" Now last war, when Insurance ran high, and treight too, and the stores of ment, biscuit, rum, den, &c., were nearly double they now are, it was said that every man so sent out cont 18%. In these happy days of peace, when all these charges must be so much reduced, we should think that 10/. would cover this grievous burthen, and a regiment of 1000 men would, therefore, stand the Honourable Com pany in 10,000%; and sa, during their transit, they per form no work, the genius of profit and loss steps in and auggests, that the only way of recovering this " Invest ment," is to get as many years' Service out of the regi-ments as possible—that is, as long, sh! and much longer for many, as finsh and bloud will, bear it; there is a s of tacit convention, that about 20 years will bring this about.

In respect to the organisation of the company's regiments, supposing that they were rendered more effective by being better Officered with Europeans, would not the negeasity for Queen's regiments be materially dimi-nished? We mean, would not fawer suffice? That is, fewer tens of thousands be required, and being fewer, might not ten years' service in India be considered a fair return for the expense of transport? It strikes us as a necessary consequence of a better organisation of the Native force, by adopting another mode of filling up Staff appointments. Regiments, however Officered, cannot supply the immunerable Staff posts. The Commissariat takes away all ranks from the Lieutenant-Colonel to the Ensign—then the Agents, Assistants, Surveyors, and last of all, and the most sweeping, the Officers to com-

The Sepoy, we have said, is decile, faithful, and obedient; he ages, and serves with the Queen's regiments; he shares with them in their privations and dangers; but he sees them well and fully Officered he sees in this that their Government cares for the soldier, his comrade; and, near be the day when he shall lay his hand on his breast and any proudly, " Now, whatever happens, I shall not be left dwarred on the battle field, or I am now ' cared for as my European comrade is."

from the "Madras Atheneum t"—

"We are happy to find that the enject of the paucity of European Officers to Native regiments in the country still continues to occupy the attention of Military dicties at home, and it is to be hoped the agitation of a questick so desply involving the efficiency of our Native Army, will not be showed to subside until an impression is made upon the Coast of Directors to remedy and will which may ultimately prove irreparably disastrous to our Military prestige. The usual good look of the Company attended them in Schode, in the unequal conflict, at it respected the numerical strength of the contending Armies, which we waged with the Beluchess, when our men were dispersed of the presence of their European Officers, who were either Miled or disabled by wounds, whilst landing their mea on to the stack. Our Report thrice heistated before the enemy, and would certainly have taken to their heels, but for the prompt notice of the General who commanded them, and who supplied, by his distinguished galantry, the less of into Officers. But the Governhout will not always he so fortunate as to possess such a Commander as Sir Charles Napier, and a Moustor or an Eliphinatone he at the head of our armice, and in the most ortical insulance of our affairs, repeat the dissurrous flight of the former, by the diagradeful capitulation of the latter.

Charles Napier, and a Monam or an Eiphinatone ho at the heave of our armies, and in the most critical juncture of our affairs, respect the disastrous light of the former, or the diagraceful capitulation of the latter.

"With an army as splendidly appt inted and equipped as any Military force in the world, the war-dejarkment of the East India Company's aervice may well command the admiration of foreigners. But, perfect and efficient as our Native Army is in every other respect—in discipline, in the mahabures of war, in arms andsecontrements, in ammunition and Military torces and is courage and continess in the presence of the Eastwy,—attil we discover one grand blemish in its constitutions, a positive defact, which almost contrethalances every other advantage; that defect we perceive in the pancity of Extropach Officers to Native regiments. No service in the world shade the corporation of the fact, india Company, and a reference to our Army Lists will show that young, and, from their atsuiding, not very experienced Captains, have been advanced to the command of regiments. With European Officers, few enough of our native curps, nearly one half of facts attached to some regiments, are at times altogether absent from their post; name are on the Staff, and others in European Officers, few enough of our native curps, nearly one half of facts attached to some regiments, are at times altogether absent from their post; name are on the Staff, and others in European Officers, the wholes on the results of the restuation of their health. The privilege to be employed on the Staff is tantamount to a claim with our Officers, but the distribution of such patronage ought cartafulty to be regulated on a more equable scale. Entitled as they are to Staff employment, they are no less on to harlong's after the regulated period, of service, and when Officers are nick, and produces a medical certificate, the authorities cannot but great them have a bard from the mother country are the world on the same accuse—officers by foreigners, an

Such a Service, drawing its resources from a distance of many thousand miles, one would appone would be boastiful in the numerical strength of its Zuropean Officers, and well provided for casualties, either arbing from the rawayse of disease or from the accidents of war. Itself how different this from the rabing hecome masters of indie, we have approached the meighbourhout of tribes and nations wild in their independence, and flered in their courage, to dope with whom the kepry must be liberally supplied with European mergy, and adequately encouraged and supported by Buropean example and presence;

IMMEDIATELY efter the lest general Brevet in November, 1841, there were 362 Captains on fall pay baving superior lirevet rank; that mumber has been reduced, up to this date, by 181, thereby causing a saving to the public of 2s. a day on 133. Captains and Brevet Majors, or 41164. 10s. a-year ; it-is, hoped this circumstance has not escaped the consideration of the Seretary-at-War and that he may have it in contemplation to recommend to favourable consideration the long and faithful services of many Captains (varying from 40 to 38 years), who have fought and bled for their country. A step of rank to a Military man, after a life deveted to his country, is the greatest book has an be bestowed.

There are 122 Captains on full pay without Brevet rank, of the years 1828, 1830, 1831, 1832, being only one more than the number of Brevet-Majore reduced since last Brevet ! ! !

Ir the sphere of Naval Officers were circumsoribed within the walls of the fashionable West-sud plubs, or their rank intended only to mark their relative positions in the good graces of certain antiquated ladies in the condoirs of liath, it would be desirable that the designations of Officers of the two professions should be in all points assimilated; but since the Naval Officer's field is chiefly assimilated; but since the Naval Officer's field so chiefly per mare, we may be excused for wishing to retain a marked distination between the titles of the two Services.

"Nessile," however, without copying the "Military grades of Captain, Major, Colonel, &c., would make the Master "Captain-Intendent," the Lieutestant "Captain," the Commander "Commander," the Usptain, "Lieutestant-Commodores," "Commodores," and "Commandants," to most of which proposed aheages we decidedly object.

With reference to the first, named Officer—the Master—we in a great masters coincide. "A Sepatio" remarks in we in a great manure coincide. "Manufer" remarks in his article, after briefly noticing the Master's daties,—"That such a station should be one of headen, if not of landsome emolument, is manifestly for this well-being of the Naval Service. But if we except the right of procedures, of which not the slightest notice can be gethered from this Officer's designation, what does his Commission and the him?" He is quite right here, this finally the name from this Officer's designation, what does his Commission dellow him?" He is quite right here; had notif the name of Master, like that of Mate, is atteined, this Navy will continue to possess Officers bearing responsible and important charges, but with titles totally unbefitting them. The Master should, as Sir Charles Napier symmetries, be called "Sailing-Lieutenant," and no langer be decied the proper stimulants of promotion.
The title of Lieutenant require, in our opinion, no change; it sufficiently indicates his position in a ship, and on about his corresponding rank of Captain is the Army is theroughly understood. His new hee, a remortable uniform (would that we could advation as much for other Officers), and lapte forward with well-arrounded able uniform (would that we could advance as much for other Officers), and looks forward with stell-grounded hope to premotion when his services have carred it, who-ther he has interest or not. The Commander in the came way holds his right phose whether affect or in chose; but this is not the case with Captains. It was formarly a maxim on board a firstled team-of-war, that there signle be only one Captain; but this has long been see asiles.

The Commander is now a Captein, and Jack as goo his master. Let the Commander be still called Captain, but in all ships which are entitled to bear a Commander, let the Captain be a Commodore, and was that appropriate emblem of a blue broad pendant, inst of the coach-whip. But we would not stop here: it is generally allowed that, "Once a Commodore always a Commodore;" but this should not be by courtery, but by Commodore;" but this should not be by courtery, but by right. The list of Captains might well bear the subdivisions of Commodores first class, Commodores second class, and Captains. Captains should become entitled to those grades by serving affect, and have a corresponding increase of half-pay. These we merely threw out as hints; for this is the age of change, and, we would hope, of im-

"Navalie's" pamphlet should be read; for, although we have found fault with his concluding, we highly approve of many of his remarks, and cannot do less than express a favourable opinion upon the language in which his arguments are couched.

FRANCE.—The effect produced by the infamous attacks of the war press upon England and Englishmen, has undergone no diminution. An instance of it occurred a few days since at St. Omer, the particulars of which we shell here introduce from the Gazette des Tribunaux, not for the purpose of exciting or of aggravating the just indig-nation with which it is sure to be read by all Englishmen, but with the intention of calling to the circumstance the attention of the decent, and we hope the larger, portion of the French press by the publicity we give to the dis-graceful and cowardly conduct of the actors in the out-

Ohen, April 28.—An act of incomprehensible brutality has been committed in a coffee-house of our town" (says the correspondent of the Gusetle des Tribusaus). "Two sub-Officers of the waggon train, in garrison at Mt. Omer, sat down a lew days agn to play cards, and agreed that the loser affould give a slap in the face to the first Englishman they met. Whilst they were playing, an Englishman entered the coffee-house, and proceeded to the billiard-room, where he was quietly playing, when the game of the two sub-Officers being over, the one who had lost welked up to the unsuspecting knglishman, and struck had lost welked up to the unsuspecting knglishman, and struck had lost welked up to the unsuspecting knglishman, and struck had lost welked up to the unsuspecting knglishman, and struck the scene may be easily conceived. The Colonel commanding the place was immediately apprised of it, and this disreputable act will not remain anyunished."

Sweden. - A correspondent of the Debate writer from Stockhulm on 9th iust. :-" The absequies of the King will be celebrated on the 26th. The public listens with intense interest to all the details of his last moments. When he appeared to be sunk into a state of final exhaustion, his Majesty suddenly revived, raised himself up without assistance, and spread his hands over the heads of his family, all kneeling around his bed, as if to give them his last bleasing, cast a parting look at the Queen, murmured the name of his son, and then sunk back into his former position; his eyes became glassed, and he expired. The Queen remained prostrate by the side of expired. The edged, remained protects by the side of the bed, and would not be removed till the morning. SIERRA LEONE. - By accounts recently received from Sierra Leone, the party which proceeded in Her Majesty's steamer Albert, in January last, has been severely handled by the natives. The Albert having proceeded some distance up the Rin Nunez, it was found that an attack had been made on the resident European advolunts by the nation.—Miss Proctor, the daughter of one of the former, carried of into the interior, the French Consul wounded, and various other acts of attocky committed. Mr. Cookeraft, the Acting Commander of the Albert, promptly landed his crew, and attacked a stockade, in which the natives had entrenched themselves with a portion of their prisoners. After some these fighting, four-esamen killed, seven wounded, and the greater number of the remainder, including Mr. Cockoraft, injured more or less, the attacking party were obliged to return to the steamer, their ammunition being expended. The Commander sent an Officer to Sierra Leone for assistance. and Colonel Mandonald despatched Lieutenant Boggis, of the 2d West India Reg., and a detachment of the 3d to the sesse of the conflict; but on the 2d of March so account had been received at Bierra Leone respecting this party. In the Rio Nunes affair, Mr. Cockeraft was shot through the hand, and another Officer, Mr. Mallard, had his arm severely lacerated by a splinter. The natives had two or three pieces of artillery, but fortunately there were two or three pieces of artiflery, but fortunately there were no very scientific gunners, or Her Majesty's steamer would have been in an awkward position. The Albert was employed to convey the Rev. Mr. Jones, Church Missionary, up the river Namez, en route to Tecubo, to recover the papers, and bring back the son of the late Mr. Thompson, who had died at Darrah in December

[Third Notice.]

BEFORE we proceed with the work itself, we shall bestow a few words on its graphic illustrations, which are, in the aggregate, 16; viz., aiz engravings on steal; seven wood-cuts; and three maps:—Track Chart, England to China; Canton River, and its branches, with Plan of Operations at Canton; Hong-Kong. Some of the steel engravings and wood-outs we must particularies. The particular of the Chief Priest of the Foreign Tower, forming the frontisprioce to the first volume, was taken by Lieutenant White, of the Royal Marines; and gives, says our author, "an excellent notion of the poculiar features and expres-sion of countenance, which distinguish, not merely the Chinaman, but the Buddhist priest." The conformation of the head is very remarkable; and, by the phreaclogist, it will unquestionably be regarded as a curiosity. It appears that the Chinese, after they had become friendly and well dispused, took to the amusement of making caricatures of us: and many spirited things of this sort, we are told," were bawked about, radely executed and attengely coloured, but withel amusing specimens of Chinese drollery." Reduced from the original, two groups are given: one, of an encounter between our own soldiers and the Tartare; and the other, of an English foraging party. Something of the English character is tolerably well caught; and certain of the specimens "show more evidence of fun and quickness than we should have snore evidence of rain and quickness than we amount have expected among so gravo a people."

"At Ningpo, they made a sort of little peep-show of the General and his Staff, intended to be a correct representation of them in little figures. That of hir lingh (longs, with his beautitul long, grey looks, was fairly done. A capital fail lengle picture, in oil, of the General, was afterwards executed at Macao by a Chinese artist, who had been regularly instructed."

The frontispiece to the second volume represents what In frontispace to the senote votume represent what is generally called the "Tombs of the Kings, supposed to be of the Ming dynasty:" showing, also, on "avenue of gigantic figures, most of them hews from a solid piece of atone, which leads up towards the tombs." They all bore the stamp of remote antiquity. The engraping is from a sketch, made on the spot by Captain Watsen, R.N., C.B.

"The figures bear the appearance of gigatitis interiors, cased in a kind of armour, attaching on either (each) juick of the road, across whole, at interiors, reased in a kind of armour, attaching on either (each) juick of the road, across whole, at interior, attaching the activation, supported by large blocks of stone in place of pillate, each as are frequently seen as the roads leading to despite in Chica, and occasionally across the streets, erooted in business at particular individuals."

There are also a number of radely-as figures of horses, elephants, zebrus, and other animale.

"There is something peculiarly Egyptian in the appearance of them all, and one could rather imagine that the scienc was lake in the vicinity of Thebes than under the willie of Hankes. It tends, in some measures, to strengthen the opinion of those whe have endeavoured to trate a connextus between Colons and Egypt, at a vary remote period of their history. It was impossible to view these gignatic figures under the walls (and intrinsity willow them) of the amoiest capital of Chinas, without great automalment, and a disposition to hazard speculations of various kinds concepting that early history of the spot where they are found."

Amongst the other steel sugravings is a view of the Nemeric, with her steam up, and under full sail.

It is not our intention to enter into any further details of the proceedings in China, either Military or political, as they are recorded in these volumes; but we have yet a few incidental and isolated points to notice.

For the purposes of steam navigation, it is important to know, that coal has been discovered in the neighbourhood know, that coal has been discovered in the neighbourhood of Mozambique; and "there is remion to expect that it will be found in large quantity, and of good quality." It is also found in abundance in China, "Indeed it is difficult to my what is not found there: gold, sliver, iron, copper, xine, cosi, in short, all that is most requisite for asymmetrial and manufacturing people. Coal ishnown to exist in abundance in the gulf of Feshelen; it is found in the province of Che-kenng, and in almost every town visited by the expedition it was expected for sale in greater or less quantity. At Makin immense heaps of it, were found aboned up by the river side, and divided into three qualities, separated from each other."

Commenting on the various cruel modes by which the pushement of death may be inflicted in China, our author mays:—

punishment of death may be inflicted in China, our author says:—

"The most original and disgusting of all these methods, (of which, however, there was no evidence of its being used,) was ittustrated by the discovery, either at Chinhae or at Ningpo, of the model of a machine for peunding stomes to death. The original model was found in a temple, together with various others of a very extraordinary kind. It was very small, and was merely a model, but it represented a large o dong stone vaca, in which the woman was to be placed, with the back of her head resting upon one extremity, (the long hair hanging over the side, and fastened to it) while her legs were to be secured to the other extremity. The heartfole pounding process was to be effected by means of a huge atone partie, large at the base and conical at the spen, signiar to those which they use for pounding rice. The peatls, or cone, was fixed to the extremity of a long pole, the pole itself being featened by a pin in the centre to an apright support, accusating in the manner of a pamp-handle. The exthe pole itself being featened by a pin in the centre to an apright support, something in the manner of a pump-handle. The extremity of the handle being depressed by a man's weight, of course rated the cone, and, the pressure being removed, the heavy cone or pestic descended by its own weight, which was quite sufficient to pound one to pieces."

There is a breed of horses, or poules, in Chine—small but hardy little things, used exclusively for the saddle—which might be improved, and rendered very serviceable.

Bome have called it Gutzing"s Payoda, for he is said to have been the first to find it out; and it excited so much attention, that the question was at one time mooted, as to the possibility of taking it to pieces and conveying it to England, as a remarkable specimen of Chinese antiquity. How would this have been at all impossible, for, although it had seven stories, it was nitogether little more than thirty teet high, shed each story was cast in separate pieces. It was of an oringonal shape, and had originally been ofnamented in high relief on every side, though the lapse of ages had much defaced: the armaments. It was calculated by Mr. Guttleff, that this remarkable structure must be at least twelve hundred years old, judging from the characters will found upon R. Whatever its age may be, there can be no question that it proves the Chinese were acquainted with the art of castlog large masses of trou, and of using them both for called and the state of the Armarest before the England, as a mench finer and more worthy tropby than all the guas captured during the war."

" ONE can scarcely be surprised, O'Houghlahan, said Bugle, " at your disliking the look of this flys water, after the severe discipline you underwent on the opposite bank, when under the case of the cold-water-cure physician; but you must endoavour to conquer the aversion, for it is the only heverage you are likely to get on this side the ferry. And now I wish much to find and introduce all three of you to General Demilane, who was killed at Blenheim. He must bave been quite an enthusiast in his profession, if I may judge by the manage in which he questions and cross-questions me wheneve we meet, on a multiplicity of occurrences which had taken place since Charon shipped him off for this bank on all of which he appears auxious to obtain the Inliest information. If we go as far as that deep bend in the river, it 's a sure find; I never yet went there without seeing him. I am quite right; there he is, in excuest conversation apparently with some Fostency Officers. Demiling was much pleased at being introduced to the three friends, as all of them bud lately crossed the Styn, and, having seen a great deal of service, would be able to gratify him by answering some of his questions. On O' Houghlahan describing the cold-neater-cure system, and the effects produced by it on himself, the General became convulsed with laughter, and vowed that if testotalism, drenching people with cold water and wrapping them up in wet sheets, had been the fashion in his day, the glorious battle of Blenheim could not possibly have "Your servant, Major, was a wise man," said he,

" and had you teken his advise, I should not parkaps, have met you for some time longer; but as I have now that pleasure, I hope you and your friends will enlighten me on several points which I confess myself ignorant of."

Having been assured that they about he hopy to tre him all the information in their power, the General gan his interrogatories.

"I have been given to understand by many who have crossed the Styx long since I took up my position here, that in some branches of the British Army—the En-gineers and Artillery—General Officers are cretain of succeeding to Culonelcies of battalious by senioricy, as they become vacant in their respective gorps. How are those things managed in the Line? Have they also the they beco benefit of the same (as it appears to me) just and rational system?"

"Very for from it," quoth O'Houghlahan; " the poles are searcely more wide apart then the modes of handling the different branches of the British Army. You have been correctly informed us to the two Ord-nance Corpe, and now I'll tell you how it frequently fures with Lineausen. A. and B., two youths, espirants for Military fame, appear in the same Gazette; A. as an Eusiga in the Guards, which in one hour sends him over the heads of all the Second Licusciants, Ensigns, and Cornets in the Service, many of whom have been serving for a length of time in lad climates. B., spott after seeing his name in black and white, is most probably shipped for the Colonies, and there be luxuristes for an indefinite time in that must envisble of ranks—a full Easign. he proves an over-match for cholors to the East Indies. or reliow fever in the West, he re-appears in his nutive land, after an absence of many years, as a Lieutement, which step 'tie likely enough he purchased. Unless there happens to be an unusual demand for troops on foreign stations, he spends three or four years at b the greater part of them in out-quarters in Ireland-a the expiration of which, his regiment receives an order to prepare again for foreign service. Should its last station have been the West Indies, the changes are that the scene will now be changed to the East; and out he goes, with the certainty of sojourning there at least twenty yours. All those duties he performs with a good grace and if a far greater portion of good fortune attends him than falls to the lut of thousands, and he wenthers cholers fevers, dysenteries, and the swords and bullets of the enemy he makes his appearance once more on the home stage (a stage which his schoolfellow A. has, in all human probability, never left), broken in constitution, and, may-hap, a Major. He gets three or four years of House Service as before; and whom the time service for embarking again, either for the frozen regions of Canada, the West Indies, or elsewhere, the quondem youth B. fluis himself an old worm-out fellow. But he sticks to the harness; and after puying a good round sum for the Liter-tenant-Colonelry of his old corps, off he sails again. B. has not long reached his new destination, see he sees in the newspapers, just arrived from England, the death of the Colume of his regiment; upon which he and his Officers immediately bogin speculating as to who will succeed him. The next preket puts un end to all surmise; and his schoolfellow A. (now a General Officer), appears in the Gazette, as Colonel of the regiment,"

"Bless me !" exclaimed Damilune, " how rapid the promotion of A. must have been! It may be concluded

Not a bit of it," said Evergreen; "O'Houghlahan has drawn a faithful picture; and it is deeply to be regretted that examples of the kind are so abundant; and, more over, that doing the duties of London and Windsor, having free access to Almack's, and to the dimer partie and service of the great, are hirer passurers to tank and emplament, then a long life passed in the East and West Indias."

" Is it possible ! Can such things be !" exclaimed Demiliane. "Do you mean to say that regiments of the Line are after so disposed of?"

w I do indeed mean to say so," said Evergreen; "and you will perhaps be surprised to have the East very many years ago, more than helf of their had Guardenen for their Colonels; lew (it any) of whom had ever seen the East or West Indies, except on the map of the world. The injustice, however, of such a mode of proceeding is gradually becoming mentions; for when I crossed, the Styx the other day, not much more than a third part was so Officered ; a practy large infringement, too, on what Lingamen might, with great propriety, (to horrow a favourite expression of Officers of Arullery, and Engimoors) term their birthright."

"I can put the whole thing into a nut-shell for you, Gameral," said Bugie, " and in a few words fully explain everything. The Colonels Commandant of battaious of Eugineers and Actiliery are invariably from their own corpe, and the regiments of Guards are held equally mered. Were a General of the Line to express a wish to be appointed to the Coloneley of either, he would be to be appointed to the Coloneley of either, he would be consigued to a lunctic asylum; and by way of an additional balot that highly-favoured branch, a General of Cavalry is occasionally slipped into it, and he finds bireled! Colonel of the 20th, 40th, or 50th regiments, although be never did as hear's duty in the Infantry. But the application of an Infantry General for the Coloneley of a Gasulry regiment, would be almost as likely to be successful so if he were to petition the Pope and all the

against an cruel, unjust, and indefensible a system?"
"Yes," replied Bugie; "but those who have done so, although actuated by the purest and must disinterested motives, have been designated by a certain clique, genus-blers, innevators, men disappointed in the Service, and therefore degrous of overturning long-ostablished rules and regulations, which they declare have always worked and regulations, which tary declare date always worked admirably—that is, for themselves and others, possessing powerful interest. It is the system which is no reprehensible; no blame our or sught to be attached to those who are allowed to benefit by it. I have sometimes touched on the subject with Officers of the Civital, many them have been been according to the contents. many of whom have been candid enough to admit the truth o' all this; but they, naturally enough, added, that it was not for them (pardon me for using a vulgar saying), to ory stinking fish."

grounds the principe has been defended?"

" On no tenable ques," revited Bugle ; " I have known it attempted on the score of all Armire having privileyed purps, and that as it has long existed in ours, it must nacessarily be a proper, just, and wholesome meeting but I hold this to be the estical tendels ever attered. Is it not a sufficient privilege, that when a buy gate an Ensigney in the Guards, he at once passes over the heads of all Ensigns, Corners, and Second Lieutenants?

—when he becomes a Lifentenent, that he has the rank of a Captain, and is eligible to exchange with any Captain of the Line?—that the moment he gets his company he passes over the hunds of all Majors of the Line and Cavalry (many of whom have been in the Service long before he left school), and becomes a Lieuten int-Culonel? Is not all this enough, without General Officers of the Ghards being thrust into the shore of veteran Linconnen, and getting Colougiales of Regiments of Intautry in their atend? Attemute have been made in the Senate-house to bolater up the thing, by extelling to the skies the gallant conduct and prominent services of the Guerds in the field — a fact which no one who is sequented with their history will deny; but whilst their exploits have been blesoned the tenfold greater mess of the Line have been pened over in utter silence is an suigma which yet remains to be explained. If eve they whose breasts are literally sovered with stars, crosses, and medals, forgotten to what branch of the Service they are most especially indebted for them, and for the many good things they enjoy ! If their memories are so very transferous, the sooner they refresh them the better, by making them-solves thoroughly sequalized with the pert played by the Line in all the bloody battles of their day at least. A writer on the other side the Styx has truly said. The pith and marrow of the British Bervice is the Line. To that Line is England indubted for all her Military giory; and it is that Line which she ought to foster and as har secred hope in the day of danger, whether at home or abroad. In what manner it has been footeged and cherished has already been shown," said Bugis. "It has been suggested that a few and just propertion of General Officers of the Guards should receive accusally a sum fully equal to that accruing from a regiment, but that they should be coundered no more entitled to Colonelaise of the Line than to Battalions of Artillary or Engineers; the justice of which proposal admits of no doubt."

I entirely agree with you," said Demilune; "your patience, I feer, is exhausted; and I will therefore poetpone some other questions which I am destrous of asking you and your friends."

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

NAMING OF ARMS.—No. X.
To the Editor of the Nurul and Military Gazetta.
— When I in my first of this series of Letters, requested you to afford room for two or three, or more, on the shove subject, I little thought of the extent to which my correspondence would reach. It is time to conclude it; and I hope that mother letter may.

At the Coronation of our Sovereigns, three swords are borne in the procession. One is called King EDWARD's, and is named Cartana; sometimes Curteyn. It is point-less, and hence called " the Sword of Mercy." The name may have a paretiess, merciful derivation; or, as has been aurmined, he derived from a root meaning short.

FINGAL'S sword was Lune; or, according to Si WALTER SCOTT, in his "Demandagy," in English, "San of the dark brown Luno," from the name of the armourer who forged it. If it had any other name in Gaelic, I know not; nor have I Ossian at hand to

ROLAND, the Brave, nephew of Charlemagne, being in a difficulty in the Pyronees, with one blow of his potent award cleaved in the solid rocky mountain a fiscure or "Breach, three hundred feet wide, called to this day "Breach de Rolland." Although probably this good sword had a distinguished name, I have not met with It.

Balaming is a famed sword, with which "Sizorarza alew a tremendous dragon at Drakenfels, on the Souly, the Rhine. The legend is given at some length in the hallads and books connected with that fabaliforous river. I shall here note no more than that

"With his good word thiluming the up the rocky mountain spring..." with the usual result of rescuing a fair Princess, and getting her to wife. Whother Sir S. was maned "the Scaly" from the armour of his formidable antagonist, or from the nature of his own, or from any other source, I do not find any mention in my notes.

Nor have I snything further connected with my subject and the Rhine; albeit I have travelled and voyaged many hundreds of miles on its banks and waters.

While I charry that Dalamuny is a Sanskrit word, I will take the occasion to remark that, probably, a proneness will have been seen in your Correspondent to find "parallel passages" from East Indian sources for almost every name and thing, not Asiatic, that he has brough forward toughing "Arms, and those who wield them,"
He admits such processes, grounded, he hopes, not on unreasonable hypothesis, but forced on him by such parallelisms, or similarity. To him such similarity is very striking and unaccountable? not merely in reference to the subject of these letters, but to others, and shose chiefly to geographical distinctions, names the most lasting-of mountains, rivers, Nowns, and such little changing nomenclature. In these, many hundred native names (unhappily likely to be lost in the committee apopensity of discoverers and settlers to modernize them) retain the sound of what he deems their Sunskrit origin, and very trifingly, if at all altered! This, he cannot help thinking, goes far to show that a similar language must in early days have been very widely aprend over the surface of the earth; among distant tables, islands, and continents, unheard of by the existing race of Hindus, and unknown to their predecessors. And these questions arise-if such fact be admitted: were such distant namings derived from an Sast Indian language? and if so, how? Intercommunication seems unaccount able to a sufficient extent; and if not sumifted, a greater difficulty presents itself -- were the disleves of all these distant regions, including Australia, New Zenland, America, N. to S., Greece, Ireland, India, the islands of the Pacific, &c. &c., derived from a common source? and h' so, how? These are questions not to be now discussed; but are, it is submitted, highly deserving of research.

To return to our subject; we will notice a few names of weapons connected with the heroic legends of the Hin-Among the hundred names of the sun is Twasmrs, and among his arms in Treashires. SOMA, the moon, bears Shishira. Siva, in a Neptunio character, trident, or Trisula. RAVANA, the royal tyrant of Cog-lon, had certain arrows, which in their flight between the bow and their mark, had the faculty of separating into many parts, each becoming a serpent—and hence called sarpa cana, or serpent-arrows. To counteract such dington, cheers the hearts of us exiles; not the least of which is his patronage of morit. But we are pussion to understand the appointments of Captains and Lieutenants to Portsmouth Academy. What this means we knew not. Our conjecture is, that it must be for the study of steam. as it must be presumed that Officers of their grade are fully conversant with the seience of navigation. our conjecture be right, and their Lordships have taken steam under their fostering care, how are we to reconcile the omission to patromers of the many Officers who have releasterly devoted themselves, and at considerable expense too, to this solence? Parhaps we are thought too We cannot always remain young ; but we have bad Experience, and some of us proved our seal, under this new and most important, b anch of service—uny, have new and most important branch of service—nay, have been conspicuous. Perhaps it is that we exites from no-casity, are too far from head-quarters? In point of distance, as measured by sailes, this may hold good; but space in comparatively sanishilated through the medium of this very talisman, and like Abaris of oid, we can tracers a title the relocate of a name in fact his space with the velocity of an arrow: in fact, we may be said to be as comestable at this distance, as Officers formerly were when resident in the Highlands of Scotland, or the bogs of Ireland, and even more so. Canada is speckled with post-offices, and daily mails in all directions, little as the fact may be known in England. But even have we have our seas, and as Jonathan is calivening Lake Erie with his first steam frigate, doubtless to be followed by others, probably England may contemplate something similar, and holds in reserve those of its servants in Canada, who are able and willing to assume such courmand. I can only say there are many ready to respond to the oad whenever occasion may require their services. But be good enough in your Notice to Correspondents. to inform us of the nature of the appointments to the Academy; for let it not be imagined that because forgotten ourselves, we forget the Service. Our assump-tion of the scythe in liqu of the sword is not a matter of choice, and though our hands are in the fields, our houses are in the Service; nor does it unit us for the renewal. Be assured the Nanal and Milliary Gazette is looked for with the earnestness of letters from absent friends; and though no longer likely to benefit by the liberal and generous scale of "Pensions for the Widows of Officers kelled in action, or drowned," or the "Compensation for losses by shipwreck. &c., &c.," we test grateful to those in authority for the hind and truly charitable consideration in behalf of those more fortunate than ourselves in coming under the notice of the Adolirally Board; and the discrimination in regard to the pensions most judicious, for the conviction that a respectable provision secured to the family in the event of the death of those they look up to, cannot fail to nerve their evergies in action, and dissipate any lucking reluctance to meet the foe, whether that fue be death itself, or the enemy of the country. It only remains to "distribute medals of ment" to survivors after action.

AN EMIGRART.

At Bow-street, Ensign John Skinner Francis, Cape of Good Hops Riffes, and Mary Aus. Browne, a governors, have been charged with forging and attering a chaque for 190/., another for 30/., and a third for 250/., each purporting to be drawn by Downger Lady Nelithorpe, with intent to defraud Messre. Smith, Payus, and Smiths, bankers. After having evidence, Mr. Jardine said he haw very little to affect the male prisoner, and be boped at a future day the matter would be satisfactorily explained. He would call upon him to put in ball, himself in 1000% and two sureties in 500/, each, to answer the diarge at the Central Criminal Court. The required suraties being in attendance, the prisoner was discharged, and the female was fully committed.

illustrated by the pencil of Granes Cautranark, carries with it such a recommendation as may almost dely criticism. And, truth to say, we havily know have to convey an adequate notion of the exoberant whim and divilery by which these relames are characterized. They are a perpetual jeast of gasety. Advanture succeeds to adventure, seems to seems, character to character, and in all so much variety, so much genine humon, that every taste must find something wherewith in he pleased. Arthur O'Leary's wanderings earry us from Faris to lituasels, from Bruspels to the Brunnens of Graness, smort Divious amugglers, justs the mountains of Npa, along the banks of the Bhine; and everywhere fresh adventures, rich assendedses, marvellous scappes, and unexpected wonders, present theosestews. Br. Lever's atyle is admirably adapted, from its deathing character, to delomate such seases as he has chosen for his here. "—John Bull, Henry Colburn, Publisher, 13, Great Mariborough-atreet.

**Soft The present work is the only full and complete history of Raily in our language. It combines of course all that is valuable to the Ragish reader in Simondi and the later histor writing, with an ample knowledge of the earlier sonalists. From personal motives it was published at first under the name of Fractural, and as such its known in scholars and students.

A considerable hum was expended on the larger edition, in two volumes, 3vo, which is now offered complete for one-fifth of its former price. It is admirably adapted for a class book, and, no doubt, will take its place in the higher schools with the like editions of Euchle Europe, and Thierry's shormers to aqueet. J. BOHLER'S NEW PATENT LEVER INSTRUMENTS.

KOHLER' having brought to perfection and obtained her Mejerty's Letters Patent for the above invention, which he has applied to the CORNOPEAN, TRUM-PET, COMNETTO, TRUMHONES, and FRENCH HOENS, he clib now with great confidence, after an experience of Five Years, in bringing the action to its present state of perfection, recommend them to iter Majesty's Army and Navy, and all Professors and Am reference and Amateurs. The advantages that this Patent gives to these instruments

1. All the Tunes and Semitones produced by the Patent Lover are quite as perfect as the Natural Notes Daths Instrument.

2. The intervals in the Diamonic and Congulatic Scales are perfect, the compass greater, and the most rapid and deficult passages may be performed with a precision, freedom, and falses of tone, and comparative case to the performer.

'a. Combinations in harmony which never before goold be performed at all by any Brass landraments, may now be executed with perfect state, and Ten or Twelve instruments on this principle, can produce a more rich and sonorous effect than Twenty-four, bould do on the old principles. The harshness of tone in the former Brass instruments is entirely done away with, and a fet of these instruments heard together, produces wiltery and harmonious effects never before heard.

These instruments are now in one in Her Majuret's Parvars Bard, Frant Less Guands, Royal House Grange, Guenadses Guands, Folkbium Grange, Sc.

Bir W. Baih, who lately received the benour of Knight-hood, and who was in attendence on Her Majesty at Granton during her late visit to Scotland, is an Officer of great merit, having been in active service from the time of nis entering the Navy, in 1793, till the close of the late war. During this period, he was at the capture of the French frigure Digway-Treum, in 1794, and in a severe action with three Franch frigutes off the Manifilm. He te of the served on abore at the capture of Trincomaise, in 1795, and was present at the taking of Amboyna and Banda, in 1796; was severely wounded in a cutting-out expedition at Sourabaya, in 1800; was Master of the Carolina at the destruction of the Datch shipping and capture of the Jana frigate in Batavia Roads, in 1806; and was again wounded in taking the San Raphael Spanish gallson. After serving on the coast of America during the war, he returned home and published a practical work on the variation of the compass, for which he received the thanks of the Board of Admiralty and the flon. East India Company.

SALE OF SHIPS OF WAR .- Tuesday afternoon nine ships and vessels of war, which had been declared unfit for service, and ere now lying in ther Majesty's dockyards at Decomport, Portsmouth, and Chatham, were offered for sale, by direction of the Lords of the Admiralty, at their office, Somerset-bouse. The Commissioners pre-sent were Sir George Seymour and Capt. Sir W. Symouds. There was a fair attendance of ship-owners, merchants, and brokers, but the biddings afforded no great evidence of a desire to speculate in this description of property. Bir George Seymour informed the company that the sale would not, as on former occasions, be conducted on the principle of Datch auction, but that an upset price would be taken, the Commissioners being entitled to a reserved battagen, the commissioners being entitled to a reserved bidding. The several lots were then put up, and disposed of as follows:—The Lyra, 10-gun brig, 236 tons burden, was put up at 350%; the reserved bidding 700%; not sold. The Delight, 10 guns, 231 tons, put up at 350L, and no advance, was not sold, 500L being the reserved price. The Juseur, 10 guns, 387 tons, not sold; 600% the reserved price. The Juseur, 10 guns, 387 tons, not sold; 600% the reserved price. The Hurriet, lighter, 33 tons, was knocked down for 130%. The copper was said to be worth the purchase-money; the Pylades, 18 guns, 432 tons, created some competition, as she is said to be in good condition; 550% was offered, but the Commissioners and the reserved price was 900% to be talk. The Alexenter said the reserved price was 900l.; not sold. The Algerine, 10 guns, 231 tons, was sold for 570l. The Wessel, 10 guns, 237 tons, said to be a remarkably time vessel, was sold for 540l. The Termagant, 10 guns, 231 tons, was not sold, 1000/, being the reserved price. net soid, 1000. Deing the reserved price. The Swan cutter, 144 tons, was the last let; 1201. was the reserved price; and as there were no bidders, she was not sold. The lots sold were generally considered good bargains, but it was evident that shipping is not much in request.

H.M.S. Vindictive, 50, Capt. J. Toup Nicolas, is to save Valparaiso towards the cud of May for Engl with a freight of upwards of two million of Gollars, collected by the Caryafort, 26, Capt. Lord G. Paulet, which will be trans-shipped to the Vindictive upon the arrival of Caryafort at Valparaiso.

11th Husayes.—A splendid appertalument was given on Friday last by the Earl of Cardigan to Sir E. Makenny, Lieutnuant-General communicating the furner in Ireland; Major Coneral Wyndiam, the Officer commanding regi monts at present in Dubles garrison, and a distinguished company of Military men, when, for the first time, a most beautiful piace of muckareaship, the gift of Prince Aliest to this gallant corres, was placed upon the me-s-table, where it was the thomse of universal and wolf-meritad admiration. On a secontal of pulished black merble with siteer saroli mouldings, borders, find feet, stands an exquisitely designed figure of his floyal illighness in full uniform as Columnt of the 1 th Hussars, mounted on his favourite Arab charger, in an attitude at onen natural and graceful. The likeness of the Prince and the contour of his figure is most faithfully preserved, whilst the solion of the horse is extremely too and spirited. At a understa-distance the tout-ensemble to most striking t but it is only by the closest inspection that the merits of this degant present can be duly appropriated as an elaborate work of art. The gargeous deparations of the uniform and horse trappings, and all the intuities of Military equipment, are given in the solid silver with surprising acouracy and effect, which appear the more admirable the morer they are viewed. Lord Cardigan, to addressing the company, after "The Health of Her Majerty," alluded to the direumatances under which the above beautiful gift was presented as a token of the Prince's categorfor his old corps. On a silve plate, merical into a side of the pedestal, is the simple invertebra, " Presented to the litts Humans by their late Colonel, Primes Albert, Feb. 1844."

On Thursday last our market-place was crowded with foundspeople and visitors assembled to witness a celebration on the part of the Military now atshowed at our flarracks, in Princess Alice youngest daughter of the Majeaty, who completed her first year, and of flor Royal Highness the Duchers of Gloucester. The day was beautifully fine and conduced much to the brilliance of the display. About buff-past twelve o'clock several soldiers appeared on the Market-aquare with flags, and stationed themselves as an to keep the space clear intended for the Military. Shortly after, a detachment of the 64th Regiment survived from the interacks, beaded by the band, and under the command of Lieutemant Colonel Stretton. They formed into line, while the band played a few very beautiful sire. At one o'clock they fired three rounds from right to left of the front rank and from left to right of the rear; after which three hearty cheers were given in huncaut of Hereshot Grackous Majeaty. The few de juie was streemed us good style. The line then broke into open comman, and marched past is slow and quick time. The steadiness and cleanly appearance of the men was allowed by all to be most admirable, and reflects the highest credit on that experienced vateran, Lieut-Col. Strettom, the Commanding Officer. This is the first instance within the last twenty years that any regiment arationed in Northampton acquionced in the feelings of the known affability and kindiess of the gallant and distinguished Colonel, who has ever shown thmeelf ready to participate in the loyal reclengs of the front and reflecting and known affability and kindiness of the gallant and distinguished Colonel, who has ever shown thmeelf ready to participate in the loyal reclengs of the front after noon the On Thursday last our market-place was crowded with spontaneous burst of loyalty was owing to the known affability and kindness of the galiant and distinguished Colonel, who has ever shown himself ready to participate in the loyal rectings of first Most Gracious Majesty's authors. In the afternoon the band returned to the square, and for two hours entertained our townstolk with their delightful music.—Northempton Herald.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE WARRANT ESTABLISHING MILL TARY SAVINGS SANKS. To the Editor of the Namel and Mittury Gravits.

By the institution of wise and practical measures which enable an individual in a hemble sphere of life to avail

a system of economy as will effect an improvemen secuniary circumsteness, they will aften be found to confor greater advantages than a direct increase of emulument 1 insemuch as they tend to establish a practice of pruden and careful action, which possesses the most salutary moral influence, in wearing a man from those visious as degrading spendthritt-habits, which so meterally effect his present and future prospects in life.

himself of the opportunities they may afford to adopt and

Such a measure is the Military Nevings Bank Warrent, which, as an individual of the class upon whom the boon has been bestowed, I have read with a gratification more than I can express. I appreciate it as the most valuable favour that has ever been conferred upon the British Soldier. Independently of the vast benefit which such a measure is calculated to afford the predest and servid solder, by giving him the means of depositing his small savings in security and at advantage, he will find, that by availing himself of its aid, an interest equally, if not mor advantageous will accrue than the pecuniary one, by the increased estimation and respect which his improved habits of regularity and good conduct will excite towards him in the minds of his superiors.

Savings Banks, and the vast houestes which have re-sulted from them in civil life to the poor and industrious classes of society, are too well understood to call for any commont here.

By the ready means which they afford the ingunious artisan, the industrious mechanic, the hard-working ploughman, or the careful house-servant, to deposit and ley up at interest the hard-serued proceeds labour, and by their almost insuperable moral influence in establishing habits of order, economy, prudence, and a consequent abandonment of all visious babits and pur-suits, how many men, now of high standing and opulance in the world, can in their own persons bear a proud testimony to their salutary effects? If experience, then, has shown that such excellent results have proceeded from Savings Banks to the humble classes in civil life, sure In the course of time we may hope that a similar exhibi-tion will be manifested by the increased respectability of the firstish Army, especially as the soldies facility, in the serialnty and regularity of his pecuniary receipt, of adopting an advantageous and progressive aystem of economy which the fluctuations in trade and commerce do not permit mechanics, and others similarly situated, to do; but on the contrary frequently compet them, as a means of their daily austroance, reluctantly to withdraw from its secure and profitable depositary the hard-carned pittance, which they had put up with so much satisfaction. Neither is the soldier supplement, and to the cruel and heart-rending calamity of having the much valued treasure, which they had accumulated and persevering industry and economy, and upon which such spleudid eastles of the imagination had been erected, suddenly anatched away for ever by the insolvency of dishonest bankers. For otherwise is it with the soldier , he runs no risk on that score; there is no lack of security; for his magnificent country is his Bank, and his Sovereign is his Banker!

I would therefore most carnestly and seriously recomnend all my brother Non-commissioned Officers and soldiers to avail themselves of the inesignishic benefits of this most admirable and benevolent measure, which our beloved Sovereign has instituted, solely with the view of improving their circumstances, and that too at an evidently vant increase of labour to the executive. I would strongly recommend Serjeants in particular to do so, as they possess more umple means for deriving benefit from it, and because by their example those of the inferior sauks will be induced to advance more readily to adopt a similar course. Their so doing will slav be the means of removing any distrust which is spt to dwell in the minds of the ill-informed, of some concealed motive to their prejudice which they cannot see, yet which they fancy may exist, and which is sadulously impressed upon weak minds by the ill-disposed, who having no intention to foreske their dissolute habits would, if possible, deter others from reaping dvantages which they will not permit themselves to e Where the benefits to be derived by all from this Warrant are so evident, it becomes almost unnecessary to particularise; but I would especially point out to the soldier in receipt of additional, or good-sonduct pay, the important advantage he will derive by availing himvelf of the aid of the Savings Bank. He must bear in mind, that when in receipt of additional pay. The in mind, that when in receipt of additional pay, the is deawing near the time when his bodily powers are becaming impaired by service in trupted and other climates, and when from disease or infirmity is will no longer be considered an efficient soldier. To what heter purpose, then, I would ask, could be appropriate his extre pay, then by depositing it in the Hank, where it will accumulate and form a fund, which, on his discharge, will render him such important asis a maca, in establishing him comfortably and respectably a disi life f I would also particularly recommend those s. o enlisted since 1833, to lay up both their regular and extre pay. They are aware that the amount of pention which they will receive is small, compared with that prescribed by the Warrant of 1820, and quite indequate to support a man in Great Britain, without some additional means. But although the amount of pension has been reduced, the Government, with a wise and paternal consideration, has offered to the steady and economical soldier, the means of laying up his money at a good interest while saving, which, should he avail himself of it, will materially remove the embarragment he would labour wader when discharged the did not nomes such an advantageous opportunity of so doing; and he will find that by practising a rigid sys-tem of economy as a soldier, it will operate most favourably when he is left to his own resource

Although I do not profess to he intimately conversant with matters of finance, yet I would suggest to those of my fellow-soldiers who may dean it worth their while to read these brief observations, what I conserve to be the most advantageous mode of depositing money in the Savings Harks. By the 3d Article of the Warrant, it is enjoined that one-third of a pound ($\text{$\text{$\sigma}$}. $\text{$\exitinx{$\text{$\exititt{$\text{$\exitit}\$$\text{$\text{$\text{$\text{$\text{$\text{$\text{$\text{$\text{ sum has been deposited. At the end of a quarter three sum has been deposited. At the end of a quarter three farthings interest will have been accommissed; and as the old comminal adage has it, "every little will make a mickle," why not avail yourself of the three farthings interest, and add it to the principal in such a way that it will not be rendered uscless? By adding 6s. 74d. to the above interest, you will have two-thirds of a pound in operation for your benefit, and thus you will possess the operation for your concert, and thus you will possess the full use of your memey. Let every soldier, then, tracities upon a certain system of saving his money, from which he need not deviate except under extraordinary circumstances. This he may do, by calculating what sam he will regains mouthly for the west and tear of his necessaries, for pocket money, &6.; and however small a sum may be left, let him on no second some left. left, let him on no secount squander it away, but place it to the credit of his Bank-secount. Although but a penny s day he saved, it will, in a few years, amount to a sonsiderable aum.

Having given the Warrant a careful and attentive consideration, I cannot forbear expressing my gratitude for it, as a most valuable boon, and I feel satisfied that it is onloulated to effect a vast good, not only to individuals, but to the Service. Nothing, I am euro, could have been designed to promote so much the respectability of the lower ranks of the Army; and, I doubt not, considering the source from whence it has emanated, that if soldiers accept the lavour as they ought, it will be the forerunner of still greater advantages. Let them, therefore, show their appreciation of such a disposition to serve them, on the part of the Government, by studying their own wifthen agon find to their satisfaction, that, instead of being regarded as objects of aversion by their fellow-citizens in civil life which, I regret to say, they ten often, though, I fear, sometimes descendly, are, they will rise in the estimation of those whom life their inferest to obsellate, and they will gain that position in the scale of society to which the country was the white period that country are the whom period that country are the way period and the country are the country as the country are the country as the country are the country as the country are the country as the country are the country as the country are the country as the country are the country as the country are the country as the country are the country as the country are the country as the country are the country as the country are the country as the country are the country as the country are the country as the country are the country as the country are the country as the country are the country the eminent services they have rendered their country so justly entitle them.

LEAVER OF AREENCE.

Rin,—As Mr. D. O'Connell's trial, and the into agita-tions in Irviand have been the course of both Officers and men being denied the usual indulgence during the winter season of visiting their friends, and having a few weeks' respite from their duties, it is to be hoped that as Iroland has now all the appearance of becoming tranquil, and when Mr. Dan, has been disposed of, it to to be hoped, I say, that the authorities will for once digress from their usual contine, and allow the infantry that fudulgence during the summer instead.

It is very hard upon the Infantry goldier, who has but three or four years of thome Service, and has to undergo the vicinstans of climates, and long Product Services for from his home, and when once severed from his friends, and those who are dearer still then they, has Triends, and those who six denor still then they, has but a paer chance of social again; and if he desi, they recognise but the shadow of that man. I are it for larid apon the infantry soldier to depicte him of the power of accing his friends, and visiting his home, even for one winter. A man comes back a supplier and better soldier, and tike the House, after having and tome obsention from his work, returns to his duties relatifyerated, and persons them in much a manner as he never could or would have done otherwise. Lowertiches seems to have increased forms them in such a manner as he mever could or would have done otherwise. Longition south to have increased much during the last few months. What can that he attributed to? Surely if the soldler sould have got home there would have been much loss of it. Fray, Sir, exact yourself about this. The Cavalry you have long with you, the visits of infantry regis. to their country are like those of angels, tew and tar hereson. I am, Sir, MAVAL BANK. ( the Naval and Military Gaselle.

To the Editor of the Name and Military Genetic.
Sin, --Ir is underlable that a larger proportion of the cons of influential men eater the Army than the Navy; but whether this bethe cause of the consequence of ne-glect, it is not necessary now to inquire. The effect of it is left by us in various ways; among others, it leaves us sometimes without an advocate, in the great arms of public opinion.

It is not my intention to enter on the wide extent of the subject; but I would take the liberty, through your valuable Claustie, of calling the attention of the Powers to the fact, that Officers of the Navy enjoy much less disvaluable (lastle, or salling the attention of the Powers to the fact, that Officers of the Navy enjoy much less distinction than those in the Army of the same rank, owing to the anomaly of different grades being called by the same name. For instance, a mining court; and a person not knowing that there see any among them belonging to the Navy, would give all as equal consideration, he would certainly also those who life adjust consideration, he would certainly also those who life adjust consideration, he would certainly also those who life adjust consideration, he would certainly also those who life adjust even in the precedence. Likewise, a Lieutenait in the Navy is a plain Mr.—a designation which is suighted by those even who are not gentlemen; while a Captain in the Army, who ranks with him, enjoys as high a little as that held by his equal in rank to his Colonel. Alplia, there are in the Army two titles of consideration below the Captain; while the Officer next below his equal in mak—the Lieutenaut in the Navy—has but the designification of Mate, in common with the Mate of the amplicat angulant vessel, or "dung-barge."

Thus three grades of the Navy have lower titles and consideration, think thick equals in the Army. If the country had been sealing event not have been suffered to anist. It may be sithly to be of too little importance, or of too old a standing, is warrant any change; but, averely, it would be a further livened of neriect, to subject Officers axist. It may be sidd to be of too little importance, or of too old a standing, in warrant any change; but, averly, it would be a further proof of neglect, to subject Officers to be treated with light respect than belongs to their rank; and when we lear from "I all hands," of the high estimation in which the Navy is, held, it would not lie too much for us to look for buch a testimony of it, as putting us nominally, as we are in reality, on an equality with our brother-Officers of the Army. This, I submit, might be castly accomplished by the "Fountain of Honour," without introducing any date titles. but simbly by transposing easily accomplished by the "Fourtain or Flonous," with-out introducing any third titles, but simply by transposing those which have strang belonged to our Service. Per-haps there could not be a more fitting opportunity for craving such a book, than the present, since our most gratious and beloved Sovereign and her amiable consort gracious and beloved Soverege and her amiable consort have become such good salfors.

The alterations and transpositions, which I would propose to remove this alleged grievance, are—

First—That those Officers who may be selected for the command of a squadron, or for any particular service, should have the trinjorary rank of Rear-Admiral.

Secondly—That Post-Captains should have the title of

Commodore.

Thirdiy—Thir Lieutenants in the Navy should bear the title of their equals in the Army; i.e. Captain.

Fourthly—Thir disposable title of Lieutesant should then, in justice, be given to the Mates, who certainly are not inferior in Lieutenants in the Army, either in length of service, or efficiency.

I would leave unaftered the grade from which our future Admirate are to spring. The saptings which are to form our "Hearts of Cak"—the "Joily Resters"—should still rejoice in the name of Midshipmen—the pet widdles of the ladies.

The following would then be the titles of the grades in our Service :—Admirals, Commedores, Comme Captaine, Lieutenants, Midshipunen, and Cadets.

The first step at innovation has sirvedy been made, in the removal of the nacton adjuncts of Past and Master, from Captains and Commanders; and ode advantage of the further change which I propose, would he, that the Chief Officer of a ship, who ought to stand alone in his digalty, would not have to share R, nominally, with the Captain of the Afterguard, or the Captain of the Afterguard, or the Captain of the Afterguard, they have may the charge of divisions of onen; and I do not use why such divisions should not as reasonably be collaborabled by Captains, as companies in the Army. If they divide be called companies in the Army. If they divide be called companies in the Army. If they divide be called companies in the Army is along the the paper of Officers of the Army, at such a what yet had I may observe, on business; that they would not their behavior from it, incoming that they would not their appears to rank with their inferiors. from Captains and Commanders; and sou advantage of

As this is a case which, I apprehend, requires no longthy arguments in its support, I will collected by heiring that some influential persons may carry out, my suggestions; and by expressing a belief that the successful result would afford much gratification to the Navy, I have, &c.

To the Editor if the Nama and Military Gasette.

Sta,—I read in a letter by Pieton Rod, headed "Efficient Officers for Small Graft." In your Gazette of March 30th, the following, viz. —" With 2d Masters, frush from the Merchant certies, whose only examination to fit them for their situation, is their knowledge of the bearings and marks down themash, and who cannot even mark the course required to the Admiralty chartes, by reason of their not being given with inaghetic bearings."

Now, Sie, without questioning the shility of Pieton Rod himself, I should like to know by what butbority he presumes to condamn the class of Masters introduced into the Navy from the Merchant perview, and more particularly to call into question their knewladge of the compass. The men who cuter the Navy from Merchant ships are,

The men who cuter the Navy from Merchant alips are, generally speaking, those who have served in ships trading to Foreign parts, and who are not accustomed to charts with compani-bearings marked on them, as Piston Rod

Now, Sir, I beg to state that I am a Mester in the Navy, and have had the honour of serving with distinguished Officers in the Service since 1830. I came from the Merplant scruics into Her Majesty's Navy as Second Master, in the Dublin, with the late Lord James Townshend, and I refer Piston Red to the proper Authorities for my name, and character in the Service. Whatever that may be, I and the special way beginned to myself, who were engined to myself, who were engined Marchant sellows, and I boldly assert, what I doubt not will be allowed by my brother Officers in the Navy, who were achoosed Naval man, that the Merchant service has produced as good navigators, and as good seamen, as those holely Men-of-War's men.

THE AFFAIR AT TRINGPOO.

To the Editor of the Nemi and Military Gasette.

Str.,—Your Gasette of the 20th ut. contains an account of an affair at Tsingpoo. As Mr. Bernard has by some means been mininformed, if he will allow me I will suggest to him the following corrections, with which, if he is not satisfied from my pen, he will find authenticated by superior sutherities under whom I then had the hon

By reference to Sir Edward Belcher's work, he will find that the seamen who repulsed the Chinese in their attempt to cut off the retreat of our forces from the heights, or otherwise to capture the guns and stores, and to destroy on cut out the recreat of our loves from the neights, or otherwise to espiture the guns and stores, and to destroy our force at head-quarters, were commanded by Mr. Goss; the troops we encountered were the Emperor's Imperial Guards—Tartar regular troops.

I wend rather not call into question the name of the gallant and distinguished Officer who commanded the Neurois afterwards made a Lieutenant, and since a Commander; but se I have been assigned a fourth place Commission: you so I have been assigned a fourth place instead of the first, it is time for me to be stirring. I would beg to remind Mr. Hernard, that at that time the H. E. I. Company's steamer Nemeric was commission by an acting Officer—the same rank as myself—

The affair was officially reported by me to my Captain, and by him given to the Com.-in-Chief, Sir Le Fleming Sunhouse; by what means it was omitted in the Despatches I kind hot; hewever, a copy of my desputch was after-wards sant to the Admiralty. I am aware that an attempt was shade to forestall me, as it was my duty to forward my report through my Captain; but I can assure Mr. Ber-nerd, upon high authority, and by several Officers present at the time, that when Mr. Hall's report was given to the Communities in Chief "he creshed B in his hands." Mr. Hall hall not right to send in any such report.

Officers were strictly of their dety, while many otherwise contervies employed on shore.

Without reference to mumbers, wherein is enother discrepancy, I feel great placeure in bearing testimony to the gallant seal with which I was supported by Mr. Hall, who was with me neck and neck in the pursuit; but Mr. Bernard has failed, in his faithful narrative, to state that the superior Officer on the ground, and who led the fove, was felled when close to the first gan. The lower part of my sword scabbard was also shot from my side. I was under the Doctor many with a disabled log some time after.

SATURDAY, MAY 4, 1844.

"IMPERIUM BUR IMPERIO," never was more eati-torily proved to be an end mous state evil than in ' that has just occurred of the power of the C Directors to recal the Governor-General of India at will and pleasure, against the remonstrance and disec the Ministers of the Crows. This conflict, not only uncea, but injurious to the state has by an unfortunately legal right vestethin the Court, ended in the assertion of that right, and Lord Elienborough has been recalled by the Court of Directors. Thus, while the Givernor-General of India has met the full approbation of Her Majesty, Her Majesty's Ministers, and, we may almost say, Her Mejesty's subjects, he has been summarily recalled from his high office, by the censure and vote of twenty-four men. Between these conflicting authorities the public opinion of the United Kingdom can slone decide.

it cuts off a career of inoniculable utility to India, and to the empire at large, et a moment when his Lordship's singular knowledge, alili, astutences, and assiduity out be ill spared. We feel sammed at the shock our power will receive in the East, from Cape Comorin to the confines of Cabul. The people and Princes of India will be confounded. In Lord Eleuborough, the great Governor-General, they saw the man who had repaired the losse of others—retrieved disasters—restored victory to our arms—punished the bebillous—and dued every for he fought—conquered while provinces—averaged insults and wrongs—chantised or wed the transferous—and, finally with the justice and good faith transferous—and, respectively of an old ally, and secured, by the provinces of the treaty of an old ally, and secured, by the provinces of the treaty of an old ally, and secured, by the provinces of the treaty of an old ally, and secured, by the provinces of British arms, the throng to the rightful but infant beir of British arms, the throughto the rightful but infant heir of Gwallor. These are the acts of Lord Ellenborough. These the many millions of the East-have seen and appreciated. Never stood there on Indian soil a Governor-General in a prouder attitude, a better representative of his Sovereign, a more able and sufficient Governor of all India. In this opinion of Lord Ellenborough, few of these who can free themselves from Leadenhall prejudices, will be found to dissent. They will join their expression of satisfaction to the incounterful opinion of the Dake of Walliandre. While opinion of the Duke of Wellington. The open and frenk avowal of the Duke was exactly what we expected from his Grece. He avowed that the exercise of this legs right to recal was "a ground indiscretion." "I do," saiding, pronounce this the mes ue over known; and I ablic affairs for a long indiscreet exercise of pow

Public curiosity has been largely excited to discover the causes easigned in the fourt of Directors for this very indiscreet exercise of the legal right—the summum jus, but summa injuries to the interests of Britain and the large been majoritus to those acquainted with India. It has long been majorithe to those acquainted with the Indian public, and will the Home Authorities of the India House, that the manipus mising opposition of Lord India House, that the manifest mising opposition of 15 Ellesborough to the windissle jobbing in high quicte Ellenborough to the wholestle jobbing in high quirters, and the retail jobbing of puberdinates, especially in the Civil departments in India, the other with his comployment of Military men in publications of a civil nature, have of Military men in publications of a civil nature, have brought down upon his the sullen hatred of many Civilians in India, and the sullen them and their relatives at home, the wrath of their pursues in Leadenhall-street. The Court of Directors, which maligned, have in vain remonstrated in fevour of their pet service, not approving of too searching inquiries, he being ruinous to their own patronage, and not calculated to earloh individuals, sent patronage, and not calculated to carion murraman, to India not to mend that ways but their means. Nor has the representations of Lodi Ellanborough in favour of augmenting the number of European Officers in the Armies of India, and pulling them from the suppressed Armins of India, and pulling them from two superstanding on useless Civil servants, gained him good will with the Court of Disectors. One exception to this is to be found in the insular possessions thich lie close at our door—the Channel Jelands. Here the ancient Norman laws, which are not now to be found in any other part of the world, flourinh in all their pristing atapidity—incomprehensible to strangers, and scarcely better known by those who try to administer them.

A partion of the residents in the Islands of Jersey and Guernary consists of persons who have gone over from England for motives of pleasure or economy; to these, as welling to the parrietes, it is a constant subject of annoy-ance and dissection, being, under the control of foreign laws, administered rarely injurisdom, and often in caprice. This produces instation. On the other hand, the people of the hinds, so blind with prejudice that they cannot, or remarks of visitors with fashings of anger and spleen, and begins a species of heatility springs up which could never edict, in this point of vises has lived under the same laws, which they equally understood. For the most part the Military Officers, who here had also to samples the office of Governor or Lieutenant-Governor, have distinct to involve themselves in disputes to which they could see me and, have winked at all the memory was see he and, have winked at all the memory always, particularly in the administration of the administration and the administration of the administration and particularly the functions of parietrate forces, and judges, and the core administration of parietrate forces, and judges, and forces are administration of the core and the cor then, must it be, when pieced at the discretion of persons steeped in prejudice or ignorance !

The present Lieutenant Governor, Major - General William Napler, has too strong a feeling of what is due to his own character, as representative of the British Government, to shut his eyes to all the abuses pensing before him, and hence a great outery has been raised at his interference. Whatever may be the result in the island of Guerneey, we trust that the disquesion will rouse public attention, finally arge Parliament to put an end to this anomalous state of things, and abrogate these absurd and stupid laws, which have been sillowed so long to exist within the British dominions.

TEE Lieutenants of the Revenue Cruisers and Cos Guard are greatly concerned at the non-appearance of the name of any one of their brother-Officers (promoted last year) to the appointment of Inspecting Commander, to which they were as a matter of course, nominated previous to the annual promotion of three selected from the more than three hundred employed in the Revenue Service. It is remouted that these Officers, being above forty-five years of age, are considered ineligible for the appaintment of Inspectors in the Coast Guard, in common with the Commanders promoted for services affoat. If so, this rule will the keenly felt by those Officers who have served perhaps fifteen, twenty, or more years, in as ardnous and as barassing a service as any under the Crown, and the worst remunerated of its faithful servents. The Lords of the Admirate have hitherto generally employed the Officers that service, from which they were premoted as the ore experienced in its particular branch, viz., Naval surveying, prevention of the slave trade, prevention of smurgling, protection of the oyster fisheries, and the Admiralty Semaphores. In the two latter branches of the Naval Service the Licutenants, on promotion, retained their appointments. The Admiralty have also waived the mer of Lieutenants promoted by the Board of Customs : 4- Immendation for Revenue Service, on the Commisere of that department certifying to their eligibility the appointment of Inspecting Commanders. Beis, the probability is, that those Coast Guard Lieuten ), promoted enclusively for Revenue services, are withfrany interest whatever, save that of the Comptroller-General; and if their age, being perhaps above forty-five when promoted, excludes them from the appointment of Inspecting Commanders, their greatest ambition, their promotion becomes an injury, not a profit to themselves, their wives and families; being superannuated, as it were, upon a much less income as Commander, than they enjoyed as Lieutenant of Station or Revenue cruiser.

We would have it comprehended that we are not is terested in the waiving of the Admiralty rule of age in farour of those Lieutenants whom their Lordships may at any time promote from the Coast Guard for former Naval services, but exclusively for those three Officers ennually promoted for special Coast Guard claims—those sallers of fortune and hard service being upwards of twenty-wise years' standing as Lieutenants when promoted-who, if not appointed Inspecting Commanders of the Coast Guard, from which they were selected for promotion in consequence of their seal, vigilance, and success, those chosen Officers, from more than three hundred competitors, will be laid aside for life on eight shillings and sizpence per dism, and regret the bour of their promotion which was held out to them as an bonourable reward, and the certain step to higher appointment and greater

I would beg, therefore, to offer a few remarks. In the first place, the Maral and Military Commission fully allowed the distinc of these Officers, and would have placed them in their proper position as commissed Officers, but for one individual.

The present talented Board of Admiralty have most certainly falt for the degraded position of the Mates, by making them Commissioned Officers. And as they are now Commissioned Officers, renking with Lieutenants the Aresy, and before all second Lieutenants of Marin and Energes of the Army, what shind y, and before an around Appropriate there posses of the Army, what objection den there posses their being called Sub or Second Lieuteant bly he to their heing o and also to their meeting in the Werd-room. Every other Officer but the Mete has a proper appellation; for in-stance, the second Matter bearants to what class he common out the speed Mateier bespeaks to what class he belongs, and also the destricted very list, but the posed in their proper places in the New List, but the posed devils of Maios appear to belong to no class of Officers and the wars unporthy devile of Maias appear to belong to no class of Officers, being stuck away by themselves as if they were unworthy, or a diagram to their Lieutenants, or to be put down to their akips. These may appear trides, but they are guiling for all that. You say again, "Could this Officer, when in the Ward-room (for it cannot increase his rank) be refused a cabin? Yes, but a proper place should be fitted in the cockpit for them to wash and dress in, and a canves some round where they alsop, similar to what the super-supergraph is the could be dress. numerary Lieutements have at present; this could be done without any expense. If this was the case there would not be so many Mates at Home, in Gunrd-ships, Excellent, Callege, &c.

lent, Callege, &c.

Again, I would bring to your notice the mortifying position in which Mates are placed, by seeing the Engineers wearing the same uniform as thomselves, the only difference being the bitton a and who knows the difference, even when near, except the Naval man? Frequently are they taken for Mates—as, for instance, "I saw," says a lady, "a Mate coming out of a dirty little beer-house!" So much for respect. This is a fact; for the Engineer of the Bes, at Perismouth, may be seen with a double-breasted surtout-cost, and gold lace cap, and no one could tell him from a Mates. Why, I ask, should this be allowed 3 and why should thisse Officers not have a proper and becoming sufform, as the inner Officers of a proper and becoming uniform, arthe junior Officers of the Army have? I have had near telepty years' experience in the Navy, and I maintain that, by calling the Mates Sub or Second Licutemants, and alligning them to mean in Sub or Second Lieutenants, and allowing them to mess in the ward-room (their proper place), and giving them a uniform according to their rank, would be an advantage to the Service and themselves, and would not in any way cause afterations in other ranks, or in Naval discipline excepting that the Assistant-Surgeons should also mess in excepting that the Assistant-Surgeons should also mess in the ward-mom, as Officers and gentlemen. I write these remerks, knowing it would be felt as a greet been by these Officers, and would be no more than their just rights, and still he senseded to them are long y in which case the Cap-lain could direct the Midshipmen's mess, and place it under the management of his Clerk and the Naval In-

Oun attention having been diensted to a letter which has appeared elsewhere, in which the writer calls into question the decision of the Communicatio-Chief. as to inding out all regiments of Cavalry on foreign service, no matter, whether they be licery or Light, in their proper tells, we are indused to republish a list of the Cavelry Regiments at home, with the years they respectively returned from foreign service.

94 Bingues Gés. (Nayt) 1st Bingues (Roysle)	1016 1016	19th Bleeners 19th Light Draguous 4th Light Draguous 7th Heters 1st Draguon Gestile	184

By the above, it clearly appears that the 6th Dragger Guards is the first for duty, which regiment has been at home ever since 1906, and in fact only a part of it went for a short period to Busines Ayres; still, by doing so, it was counted a tour of duty, and hence the 7th Dragon Guards were ordered to the Cape of Good Hope last year before it. Notwithstanding this, the writer in question states that the 10th and 12th Light Dragoons are first for foreign service, although these regiments went to Portugal at the latter end of 1826; as part of the expedition then sent to the frontiers of that country to sppees the threatened Spanish invasion, which was effectually accomplished; and after all danger was over, the regiment returned, to England in 1828. Can any one dany that this was a regular tour of duty? It was, at all events, year superior to that of the 6th Dragoon Guards in 1208; but further, the 10th and 12th Light Dragoons served through the Peninsular war, and sies at Waterlop. Perhaps these were not tours of duty! Indeed, the writer would have one to think so, as he sape, "Let the 16th and 12th first go on foreign duty," and then begin with the Henviss (the 6th being the first). We can assure the writer that he does more harm than good by advancing such statuments, and makes it doubly certain that "sell or sell," will very soon be his portion.

Wa have read with regret in the columns of a weekly Paper of the first class, a remark connected with the motion of Sir A. I. Hay, that it was not respectable to see Officers appear in the character of beggars. We deeirs to put our contemporary right by stating, that where persons of any class of excisty put forward a slaim for undisputed rights, it sannot be construed into higgery. That such is the case with respect to the War Officers we have not the alightest doubt; they have men, themselves deprived of rewards which have been conferred on others more recently, for no fault of their ewn, and they are only exercising their undoubted right in remonstrating. In our last Number we made an allusion to some of the possible causes that might have prevented, in the first isstance, the distribution of rewards; but even supposing this assumption to be correct, it will in no degree diminish the hardship on the Officers in question. We shall continue to uphold their claims; and we now select from numerous correspondence two letters bearing on this point, one from " An Old Peninsular Soldier," and another from our correspondent at Bedford, in a different and I, as one of them, beg to offer him mine very sin-ocraly. Had the House divided, these can be no doubt that his motion would have met with someidsrable apposition, for it is undeniable that many who were amployed on other services whilst the Peninsu can ill conceal their dislike and impationce at hearing exploits of that Army sliuded to. But was it not natural for exploits of that Army shades vo. must wan a more many to bope and expect to find a stout champion in our cause instead of a decided opponent, in an Officer who is indebted to the Peniasular Army for his rapid promotion, his measure and his present high situation? Can is be sent, and his present high situation? regularity and that ye who fought in the same fields where he gathered fuch a profusion of gold medals and crosses, should feel that we were fully entitled to a selfary bit of bruss with the word Peninsula engraved on it? We are told that it is now too late, as more than thirty years have passed away since the Paninsular wer; that services have passed away since the l'enineuler wer; that services aqualiggreat were performed by our tesope sinewhere; that the results of Waterloo were such as to warrant a general the results of waterloo were sum as to warrant a general distribution of medals, and that it was deemed politic to give these also to those who served under Generals Policies, Nott, and fails. To which the gallant Officer who so strenueusly opposed für L. Army, and virtually at the head of the Qu given. If this was an act of justice to Waterloo men, it was the very entrems height of injustice not to reward the Peninsplay soldiers in the same manner. A strong feeling very naturally manifested itself amongst the Peninsular men from the moment the intention of giving Waterloo medati was first known; nor has that feeling ever subsided to the present hour. The plea of its being too late falls at once to the ground; for although no formal application for a Peninsular medal was made until 1840 (the cold and repulsize reply of the Dake of Wellington to which is well known), every Officer of any standing in the Army knows full well that an ardent wint to possess one has unceasingly been felt and expressed for the last nineand-twenty years; and were there claimants for a quarter of a million of medals, lustered of 50,000, the brans cannon which we captured at Vittoria alone would amply suffice for them all. From the following passage of Napter's History, a tolerably gorrect opinion may be formed as to how far the services of our troops in the other fields alluded to by the opponent of Bir L. Hay's motion (great and important as many of them unquestionably were) can bear a comparison with those of the Peninsular Army; and men will, moreover, be enabled to judge whather the survivors of that Army have or have not met with unpardon able injustice, neglect, and cruelty from quarters where, above all others, they had the least right to expect it.

AN OLD PENINGULAR SOLDIER.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Guartic. Six.—I have this day received a latter from my brother, who has been some years acting as Oragoman to the Sublime Who has been some years acting as Uragoman to the Sublime Facts, in which he informs me that there has been lately a good deal of szeitement in the Turkish Capital, owing to a feeling of discontant prevailing among the Albanian soldiers. These troops, the Lists of the Turkish forces, have distinguished themselves on several occasions, particularly in the flyrian war. They complain that they have never received any reward or distinction for their services, while other soldiers of more modern date, who had been simployed in putting down insurrections in Walinchis, or in making war against some savage tribes of Mount Taurus, had received honogary rewards and distinctions; these complaints had been of long standing, but had not been seriously noticed, until it was exceptained that the discontented had prepared a petition to the Sultan, which they tented had prepared a petition to the Sultan, which they meant to have presented by two Cadls, who were supposed to possess much influence in the serigito. The Seriskier Pacha thought it was high time to look about him, and a Divan was summoned to consider the case. Every one knows that the Seriskier is Commander-in-Chief of all the Turkish land forces; he is also the Governor of the Seven Towers, Admiral of the Golden Horn, and holds other situations of tring and emulument. He is a man of very high Military reserve, of great intelligence and activity, and endued with indemitable courage and determination; the latter, it is said by his detractors, sometiums degenerates into obstinacy. With these qualifications it is little to be wondered at that the Saraskier possesses great induence at the court of his youthful Sovernign; which is said, in square cases, to exceed that of seases great influence at the court of his justiful Sovering; which is said, in some cases, to exceed that of the Grand Vizier himself; in the present instance, he called the Divan of his own authority. As there might be some Europeans implicated in this affair, my brother was in requisition as Dragonian, and was present during the proceedings; he thus had, a good opportunity of remarking several of the Osmanike council. The Grand Vizier was present for a short sime, but said that he was Visier was present for a short sime, but said that he was obliged to go and inspect a new weight and measure machine, that had just arrived from England, which was fitted oning, that had just arrived from sugana, which was neter with a slide in place of a balance-red. His Highness seemed very glad of an excuse to be off; my brother also moticed the Reis Effendi, who supparted to be very busy poring over a Turkish menuscript; he could make no guess what the contents might be but he thought he could see some characters at the head which resembled the word Tablet. Executed the more also in the process. rese some connectors at the head which resembled the word Tabiti. Roschid (19. wretched?) Righh was also present; he was evidently in low spirits at the less of his citiky mother *; the snines had been a very great favourite, the mother said—"the ten ma mere, cont. a beautiful specimen of a cross between a Cumber-land and Westmoreland short-borned. The Pacha had also been much worried of late by the introduction of a law regulating the number of hours' also that were to be allowed to Turkish labourers; he himself was decidedly adverse to any innovation. It was true that decidedly adverse to any innovation. It was true that you might prevent a man altogether from elseping, but there are no way of fereing him to perform that act, as had been clearly proved by a celebrated Spanish plaitosopher, Sancho Panza, late Governor of Baretaria.

squatted on their respective aushions, the Sersekier opened the business for which they were ensembled. He said, they were well aware that he had commanded the Turkish forces in Syria ; that with the exception of one or two scoldings he had thought fit to bestow on there, he had been perfectly satisfied with their conduct and exertions, and he had distinctly told them at the conclusion of the war, that when separated together they formed one of the finest specimes he had ever seen, with which he could go anywhere and do enything. Surely this was enough to attempt the most greetly of grape. I but no; these Syro-Albanians were hy magnifered contraint. Albanians were by no means contented they queed some written document which he desired his secretary. some written necument water as an observe, as secretary, to pen on withing them, good-bys, as if things of that kind had any more meaning then the Spanisrds withing you to live a thousand years. They had continued harping on this as a promise, and even went so far as to ask for a medal. ! He (the Stracker) had not noticed these acts of insubstruction of the secretary of the secretary in the continued the secretary in the continued the secretary of the secretary of the secretary in the continued the secretary of He (the Seraskier) had not noticed these acts of insubst-diaction, until he heard that it petition was about to its presented to the Sultan by the hands of two Cedis, welk known to the Divan; this would, indeed, make him eat dirt, therefore he now willed on the mambers to give their opinion on this point, and say what eart of punishment should await such presumption? A sort of low witspering then took place among the members of the Divan, and their sentence because utilimettly known:—"That the then took place among the members of the lives, and their santenen became ultimately known:—"That the petition should be seited, torn in half, and one modely be tied on the head of each of the effending Cadin, who should; be; sewn up in sanks and dropped in the Busphorus." The Sarankius then called for his necretary, and made known the decision; adding, that, if any disturbance should be apprehended, he might call on Hilliby Dorgon Pacha and Suleiman. Themoral Pacha, the guardians of the Dardanolles, for Military aid. The Secretary, however, assured his Chief that it would be quite, unnecessary, as he would be answerable that the sentence was carrie into effect. Such was supposed to be the case, as the Cadis disappeared that a subsequent report says that the Secretary—who has a gress deal of the milk of human kindness—only saved up the mouths of the delinquents, and had them satisgied on board an English ship about to sail. This is the amount of my brother's intelligence; to sail. This is the amount of my brother's intelligence; if true, we may expect in a few days to see these interesting strangers, and i trust that they have had the fortitude to remain in the same state of merty-dom on the passage, and imbibe spoot-ment through a tube. London is now at the lowest ebb for Lions—the Ojibbsways having jest their exclusive interest by going to swimming baths, and getting married; and what a glorious pair this brace of Cadia will prove in their mouths being send up, three parts of their forms will be continuous heard, muttier, to other shame the faces will be continuous beard, putting to utter shame the attempts of some dandine who waged their hairy chins last year at the Opera. Then, how dalightful a tank for some lady who possesses those interesting weathers at her solves, to give their history, draw ayangathy in their favour, and point out the superiority of dur vivilisation over that of the Turks, who thus mercilessly new up the mouths of prating effenders, while we only sisks them withdraw their motion.—I am, deci-Fuence. during a long and devoted career in India to the service of their country, from disasters, of the advent of which none could be aware but the managing partners themselves; and that they were fully cognisent of what must sooner or later happen, none of our readers can longer doubt, if the fact was not previously well known to them, after perusing the proceedings in an Insolvent Court in India, in 183in the estate of — and Co. There it will be found annuanced that at the time, long anterior to its actual atoppage, when a partner withdrew from the firm, with, stoppage, when a partner withdrew from the firm, with, it may be presumed, an ample share of the needful to which he had no right, that gentleman, as well as the others which remained to conduct the worthless consern, were utterly insolvent. The fact suggests reflections anything but flattering to our common nature, and justifies the saying of a great philanthropiat, "that the wickedness of man was a subject more of alarm than surprise." Men of man was a subject more of slarm than surprise." Men who would not scruple to keep in existence, for purposes, soo obvious to be mentioned, establishments, after they had become actualty inactions, thereby knowingly consigning so many honoughtic and confiding men, retired Civil and Military servents of the India Company, with their families, to irretrievable want, would of course feel no twinge of conscience at going further lengths for the same ends, and we consequently find breach of trust as executors and trusters, among the other painful results which the failure and the investigation of accounts in the Insolvent Court, that followed, brought to light.
When ruin has been thus brought down upon numberless families, is it too much, we ask, to expect that the individuals to whom we advert, or if dead, their surving families, should now come forward with liberal donans for the relief of the impoverished widow of the Indian Superintending Surgeon? or would it be more than what they ought to do, under the wide-spread misery their failures have occasioned, if the affluent pariners of these ill-fated concerns, now living in London, were constitute themselves a "Permanent Indian Relief Con mittee," to investigate all cases of destitution originate by those disasters, in view to practically alleviating the

It cannot surely be inconsistent with the squae of protective duty which originated this necessary Joint Stock Committee, but acting on its spirit and principle, were the Government to institute a similar searching inquiry with reference to the late Agency Houses, in view to ascertalting the prester time at which they each and all became actually Ensolvent, and compelling those partners now living, who may have retired with funds from the concoras, intermediate between that time and the public announcement of their insolvency, to make restitution thereof to the extent of their fortunes; a procedure which would be consistent with both the spirit and intent of the Insolvent Act, which enjoins that a delitor shall be released from the hardship of imprisonment, but remain liable, if he should ever acquire property, for the payment of the balance of his debts, as is most just between man

It is never too late to do good; and we, therefore have the hope of seeing those who now thrive and faxoriate in undisturbed enjoyment on the savings, for many years; of the tolla, privations, and enterprise of sumy years, of the folia, privations, and enterprise of catera, arought to a proper and necessary reckoning. In England and Scotland, as well as in India, there must be many new passing the remnant of their days in actual destination, similar to that which the unfortunate lady whose these has elicited our especial notice, is enduring, and if they were to get up a petition to the Government for the object above mentioned, we have little doubt that these prayer would be acceded to.

HOURE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, Armit 29.—The Governor-General of India.—In reply to questions put by Lord Continuersa.

The Duke of Waltherrow said, there is no doubt whatever, my Lords, that the Court of Directors have stated reasons for the measure which they have adopted, which reasons have not been considered valid, and therefore lier Majesty's Government. Those reasons have not been considered valid, and therefore lier Majesty's Government have not concurred in the measure adopted; may, more, my Lords, I will add, in natwer to the last part of the Noble Lord's question, that Her Majesty's Government did remonstrate against the measure proposed to be adopted by the Court of Directors, and the resolution of recalling Lord Ellenburguh from the office of Govergor-General of India. I must add that there can be no doubt wishinger—although a doubt was expressed by a very great anthough right to outer of Directors to recall the Governor-General, which right is conferred upon that heady by statute. I imagine it has existed at all times since 1724, but it was conferred particularly by the law passed in 1818, which has been replaced by the law passed under the auspices of my Noble and Learned Friend' in 1823, the 24 william IV. That law gives the Court the undoubted right to recall the Governor-General. But, my Lords, I conseive that that right is one which that body is bound to aversies with discretion (hear, hear), as all bodies and all individuals invested with extraordinary powers by the provisions of law are bound to exercise such powers with discretion. Now, my Lords, I venture to submit to your Lordships, as the opinion of an individual who has had some experience in these matters, that this exercise of power, to any the least of it, is not a discrete exercise of power, by Lords, the control of Directors has that power—it has the power of nominating a successor to the Mobe parson who is thus recalled, but it has no other power whatever, my Pour Lordships we cannot be called a discretion in his high other has head of MONDAY, Arms 22.—The Covernor of India.—In reply to questions put to him by Mr. Ronaucz, Sir R. Pausaid that the Court of Directors of the East India Company had exercised their undoubted right in recalling, at their will and pleanare, the Governor-General of India; but that they had done so on their undivided and exclusive responsibility. The act of recall had not received the sanction or consumence of the ser-vante of the Crown, but it was legal and valid without any such sanction. With respect to the question whether Her Majesty's Government considers their responsible for the Government for India, he must, under present circomstances, decline entering into any discussion of that question. All he could say with reference to the fact vehicle Her Majesty's Government do or do not coincide with the Court of Directors is, that their sense of public daily with the Court of their course which shall appear to them get which they foresee from the act of the Court of Directors, and had had the opportunity afforded them of expounding their views to the Court, of the on the Court of Directors, and had had the opportunity afforded them of expounding their views to the Court, of their the step in question was utilizated the House on the realisation of those hopes of general importances with the Court, before the step in question was utilizated the House on the realisation of those hopes of general importances with the court of the co

An Enlarged Edition in fewer Volumes, and at a less price, cannot but command an extensive sale for a work which will always be consulted by Military men, and those of every shade in polition. The New Publication also is further recommended, on the ground that the Lipters and General Orders capied by the Deputy Adjutant-General, from the original manascripts of the Duke of Wellington, when commanding in India, are inserted asserting to their respective dates; and autracts from the Instructions for the movements of the Army, and from the General Orders circulated by the Quartermaster-General and Adjudental, in the Peninsula, France, and the Low Countries, with other new Fapars, will also appear for the first time in this Edition.

We believe that the gallant Editor has been indefatigable in his researches for documents that might add to the value of this Mamorial of the Career of the Duke of Wellington, and we heartly wish his endeavours may reap a guiden harvest. As the work progresses, we chall take an opportunity of examining the new matter.

Uncle Sam's Popularities. By Uncle Sam. 2"vols. Mortimer.

As most of the sketches in these volumes are reprinted from "Ainsworth's Magazine," he, they will come before many of our readers as old friends. To others, we doubt many or our renous as our monds. To others, we doubt not, they will prove equally acceptable, as new, free and easy, light, goalping acquaintances. For the information of such, however, it may be an well to present some information respecting their nature, in the words of the Cardinal de Rets, a Literary Curicety, 2 Volumes, from the original Memoirs. By the Author of the Muid's Husband. T. C. Newby.

Muid's Husband. T. C. Newby.

There volumes are very properly styled a literary curiosity; they are curious in many respects, on escent of the subjects of which they treet, and the extraordinary went of arrangement which pervades the whole Memoir of this very singular personage. As a translation, they are entereding to all those who are at all sequented with the history of the times of the Cardinal Richarless, Cardinal Maserin, the Prince de Condé, Gaston de France, (Duke of Orleans.) Ac.

Orleans,) See.

It would be difficult to find a greater surjectly than the Cardinal de Hetz has taken some pains to make himself appear throughout this Memoir; and it is no easy matter to arrive at any idea as to what can have been his object to arrive at any idea as to what can have been in object in parting forth a history (if no it may be salied) so little estimated, from its careless, unconnected, fragmentary, and obscurs style, to leave enything like a setimatory impression of his own sayings and deings. However rambling and extraordinarily disjointed as the events of his day are placed before us, there is throughout very sufficient matter to receive an attention mental. to ropey an attentive purposi.

. We must confine ourselves to a few extracts, showing some of the expressed spinious of the Cardinal de Reis, both as regards the great men who lived in his time, and upon other points, leaving the Memoirs to make them-

In the early part of the Memoir, its reference to the plan for getting sid of Cardinal de Richallen, which plan was not put into agreeution, in consequence of that person's falling iff, we find him expressing himself thus:

"It is often madness to engage in complicate; but there is nothing in the end which makes uses so whe, at least for a time; for as the danger of these affairs remains, even after the opportunity is passed, so we become prudent or circumspect in consequence.

Speaking of the Comts de Sqissons, one of the principal parties ofgaged in the plot for removing Richelleu, cipal parties singaged in the plot for removing Richelisu, we find the following :—

"The Comte de Solasons had all that boldness of heart which is commonly called valour, and which he carried to the highest point; but at the same time he had not in the least degree that attracts of mind which is known under the name of resolution. The first is common, and to be met with every day; the latter is a zarer thing than one easily be imagined, and yet is abundantly nours necessary than the other for the fortherance of a greet enterprise, and there is no greater in the world then the heading a party; the commanding an Army is nothing in comparison to it; —in short, I am of opision that greater abilities are required to make a head of a party than in making an Emperor of the universe, and that in the secuntials required, resolution ought to walk head-in-head with judgment,—if mean with a lofty judgment, the principal advantage of which is to distinguish the improbable from the impossible."

In allusion to an artful distribution of certain sums amongst decayed families, who were ashumed to make their necessities known, he observes—
"Judge of the influence this gave me amongst persons who are, without comperison, more numerous than any others in public disturbandes. The rich rarely join such but by force, and beggars do more harm than good, for it is generally known they aim only at plunder. It is those to the best who, without being reduced to beggary, yet are no straitened in their circumstances as to require a change of afthirs, hoping by these means to repair or cover their broken furtures."

Another observation in reference to his Mannia.

"There is no true history, but that which is written by men who are not ashamed or afraid to speak the truth of them-

We like the following reply made by him on an oc-

"You must permit me to furget all that may take from my gratitude, and to remember that only which may increase it."

We extract the following :—

"Fashlon, though supreme in all things, is never more so than in being received well or ill at Court. There are times when disgrace, in the manner of fire, purifies every bail quality, and sets a lustre upon the good; and there are others, when it does not become an houset man to be out of favour."

Speaking of the arrest by Richelieu of the Duo de Beau-

Speaking of the arrest py thousand or the Debugfort, he writes:—

"That which often brings diagrace upon Ministers, is the necessity of schieving actions so surrounded by obstacles, that the victory even can bring them nothing but eavy and hatted.
When a desired event unfers itself in which there is nothing to surmount, because there is nothing to overcome, it is a rare accurrence, and gives to their authority an colar so free from the least shade, that it not only satablishes their credit upon what they have done, but at the same time reflects a merit upon that which they have not done."

Arthur O'Leavy; his Wanderings and Ponderings in Many Lands. Edited by Harry Lorrequer. 3 vols. The characteristics of our reised Harry Lorrequer are so and custacteriance of our triand starty horreques are so well known—his smiling or rather laughing spirits—his quick insight into character—his axionalize knowledge of life and society—his atrong powers of description, and his lively humour, are so well and justly approchated, that we need not say this new work from his tree and fertile pen will be renaived with universal favour and normalists. will be reserved with universal favour and popularity; and the rather, that it possesses the novel and attractive feature of abowing the writer as an observer of the manners and humours of foreign lands—his "Wanderings and Ponderings" being for the most part connected with Germany, France, Belgium, and Holland. The German Stars in particular, those heat schools in the world for the Spas in particular—those best schools in the world for the study of the varieties of European obserator and manners—receive great attention from our humorous painter of the ways of living men and women, as they are moulded and modified by the circumstances mader which they are hore and breat born and bred.

We are not sure that we like this mock the better for the "machinery" through the medium of which its details are conveyed to us. Its meetle are so strictly those arising out of its reality, and the notal life of its pictures, that they would probably have impressed as more strongly had they come to us as the direct impressions of Mr. Lever bimself, instead of through the double disguise of the occurric Mr. Arthur O'Leary, and his editing friend, Harry Lorrequer. But we have no notion of quarrelling unnecessarily with the inclinations and of quarrents white who, under whatever form he may addicine us, is always amusing, often instructive, and never dull and procy; and who, moreover, has the happy faculty of bringing before his readers the common places of travel under a form that makes them " as good as new," even to those who are the most familiar with them. What, for instance, more proxy than an ordinary traveller's description of a traveller's ordinary, or state d'acte? Yot, what more piquant and pleasant, than Mr. Mr.

O'Legry's account of the same scene. Would we could O'Legry a account or the same scene. Would we could appear it, for the satisfaction of those of our readers (if any) whose hands this book will not reach. But it may not he, and we can only recommend the work to all blusses of readers, as containing something that will please the tastes of all.

Roberts's Sketches in the Hely Land. Part XIV.

Thus now Part will excite unusual interest and attention This new Part will excite unusual interest and attention, on account of the subject-matter treated in it,—five out of the six views being devoted to various departments of the celebrated Rules of Basthae. Grandeur of effect is the leading and most remarkable feature of Mr. Rebert's success, throughout this busntiful and noble work generally; but in the present Part, this feature has reached its agms—the subject-matter presenting what may be dequed, without exception, the grandest scenes in the world of art. Basibec as even from the road towards Lebenon; the remains of the great Circular Temple; and those of the Great December —these are the most atribute. these of the Great Decemy; there are the most striking features of the present Part; and there is nothing more exquisits or remarkable in the whole circle of art, in that department of it to which these sketches belong.

TNTERESTING TO LADIES,—
I've place, Laminori, Periamenta, April 4th, 1847.

GENTLEMEN,—I trinis it but an est of justice to inform you of the benefit I have derived from the use of your estmireble Maccaser Oil. About is grounted ago I found my hair gating daily more weak and thin, and much discoloured from a practice I had adopted of wetting it continually; fearing that I should loke it entirely, and hearing of the efficacy of your Macaness Oil, I have for some time past constantly used it, and the result is, that my hair is now perfectly restored and much improved in appearance and colour, having become thist, each, and glossy; R also surla freely without the case of paper, which it never his before. To all my friends I have warmly recommended your blandsane Oil is on excellent restorative and grayercules for the Air. As I have an objection to see my have in print, I beg you will sot publish it; but you are at liberty to show this letter, or make any other use you please of it, and refer appliances to me, if secessary, in proof of the efficacy of your Macases Oil.

* Opinions or was Fausa:

"This work, a Tent'il Edition of which is now presented to the pullish was facesand could having been exhausted since the first appearance, has been very much improved and enlarged by the addition of a more extended and clear detail of general principles, so also by the insertion of acoveral new and highly-interesting cases. The book, as has been already stated, is the result of vwy ample and daily-increasing experience in a class of diseases which, for some unaccountable reason, have been either attegather overlooked, or treated atmost with indifference, by the occidency medical practitioner; and we feel no hesitation is maying, that there is no meinher of sweicty by whom the book will not be found sarful, whether such purson hold the relation of a Parent, a Precaptor, or a Clargyman."—Sun. "Meisers, Cartiff's work, entitled MANHOOD, is one of the few books wow before the public on auch a subject which can lay claim to the character of being strictly professional, at the same time time it is fully intelligible to all who read it. The moral and meidlest precapts given render it invaluable."—Magnet.

"The pagents of Merson Curtie's book satisfied MANHOOD him really attended to the twenty capacity."—Agre.

ORDNAMCE BORNES.

TRELATING.—Bt.—Mai. Cowar's come, 36 betts, proceeded from Roff's Wharf at two o'clock on Tuesday morning, by one of the Woolwich stagmanches to London, and from Euston-eq., by railway, he revise to Ireland, to relieve Capt. Gottling's com., 3th light, preparatery to the return of the letter com. to head-quarters at Woolwich, to hold themselves in randings the proceed to a foreign station.

the Tory transport, after heing four meaning at the passage, strived at Jamelius on the 36th of March, and Captain Hydr's Company, 5th Sath, under the command of Captain Hydr's Company, 5th Sath, under the command of Captain Fulford, landed at Kingston on the 28th, where it is to be stationed. Now, after the company was landed at Grenada, and engaged there, and so long altogether on board ship, it is rather about dending it to the Mountains; besides, it has been growed that those man who have been some time at Newcasile, and afterwards moved into the lowlands, and the feet were where than wards moved into the lowlands, set the fever were than those who have never been to the diometains. The sending the Tory transport to Grenada, and detaining her there to take in old stages, is also a most extraordinary proceeding, axtremely unjust to those embarhed for Jamialou, and indicious in the Artenne. judicious in the extreme. There were noted hundred tons of from gains in the Ordnance-yard at Jameijes for trans-inform to England, as well as old stores in the slockyard. A shall versel was sent from one of the washward islands to the base the guns, and sailed only a few days before the market of the market of the Tory. It must be esident that it would have been better for divernment to have sent the stores at Grenada by the "dilige" yessel; and the guns from Jamaica by the Tork trapsport; but this arrangement would not have been de hunchaial to the contractors; however, it is to be hoped such a round about and dangerous method of sending trapps to Jamaica will not be again

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sin,-I believe disappointment was never more keen! felt by the corps of Royal Marines, then at the withholding of the Relirements from its veterans. It is strange that suck marked indifference should be manifested tothat suck marked indifference should be manifested to-wards the old Officers; but unhappily it is so; and I feer that until some influential person is placed at the head of, the corps, with a seat at the "Beard of Admiraty," no-thing will be done to ameliorate their condition. The statement, which appeared in the Naval and Military, Gaustic a few weeks since, astunaded everybody; for who equid have believed, that out of minety-nine Captains, sighty-five, the senior of whom has served forty-and, and the junior thirty years, in the corps, and yet not allowed the option of retiring on full-pay.

In the Royal Artillery, four Lieut-Colonele and four Captains are permitted to retire on full-pay, annually; but, in the Marines, this fadulgence is withheld. A few days since, a Captain, who had seved 35 years in the Marines, took the half-pay, whereas a Captain in the Artillery, who hed been only 26 years in the Service, was slowed the Retirement.

There are more than fifty Capitins now serving was were from eight-and-twenty to nine-and-twenty years Subalterns, and who, from their position on the list, and advanced time of life, can never expect to rise higher; surely, then, the Retirement would, not be too great a boon for such long services? It has been remarked, that the Marine corps is a body without a head, and, from the manner in which it is treated, it certainly does appear that the remark is a just one.—I see, do. M. E. There are more than Afty Capitaline now serving who

Literary Motters.

The North British Review. No. I. Kanneget Edinburgh: Hamilton and Co., London.

Eveny reader of our two great "Quarteriles" who want of an infusion of young and vigorous blood into these once powerful hearts of literary critisium. Such inteside not having been effected, they have no right to find surprised at the entrance of rivals into the field. Whether "The North British Review," of Scottish origin, here introduced to public notice, will prove a formidable, rival to enther or both of the "ancients," remains for time to prove. It promises well—at least in its Prospectus; and it opens fairly. We are told that it is to be "accommodated to the character of the times."—that "it is not intended to be a theological journal "—that "it is not intended to be a theological journal "—that "it is not intended to be a theological journal "—that "it is not intended to be a theological journal —that "it is not intended to be a theological journal —that "it is not intended to be a theological journal —that "it is not intended to be a the faterest of a well-enjsisted mind will be accluded! At the first glance, all this appears very "fiberal;"
but its point of fact, it is extremely vague; it is not
here a single great principle Belined—not one broad determined line marked out; "it is acither fielt, fleels, nor good red heering."

However, as we have said, the work spens fairly, with However, so we have said, the work opens fairly, with a long, able, and interesting article on the "Rioga Historigas de G. To the Editor of the News and Milling Genetic.

Srn,—The circumstances of this case being of importance to the Naval Service, perhaps some of your readers may be able to advise those who are interested in the matter. H.M.B. Curiew, papered: three vessels in March, 1840, and one in June, 1840, all of which were condemned shortly afterwards at the Cap of Good Hope, under the Act of Parliament thate in August, 1839, for under the Act of Parliament thade in August, 1839, for the capture and condemnation of British and Portuguese alave vessels. The bounty and the proceeds of the cargo have been paid into the hands of the agents for the ship; one of the vessels, however, has been appealed against, and the case is now before the High Court of against, and the case is how never the right court of Admiralty; and under these circumstances the agents consider themselves justified in withholding distribution of the Bounty and precede of the undisputed three vessels to meet the law expenses of the disputed, one vessel, until that case is finally settled. The questions I and others interested would feel obliged for advice in

let. Whether the Agent is strictly correct in so doing because the disputed vessel was adjudged a lawful gets by sentence of the Court at Cape of Good Hope; and the by sentence of the Court at Cape of Good Hope; and the Act of Parliament clearly states that no action, suit, &os, shall be entertained in any of our Courts for any act done by virtue of this Act of Parliament. We cannot, therefore, understand why we are to pay law expenses, even admitting the disputed vessel be now released. At all events, if we must defind the case before the High Cours of Admiralty, it is marsasonable to suppose that the bunny and proceeds of cargo for three vessels is necessary to pay the law expenses of one.

2d. How are we to proceed to compel the Agents to distribute the price-money in their hands? and which they have been for maintiful enjoying the interest of, distribute the prise-money in their hands? and which they have been for mouthle sujering the interest of, whilst the seamen, who cannot wait, has been obliged to seerified at least one-half of his descriptorated prise-money by trafficing it with the Jews.—I am, &c.,

SATURDAY, MAY 11, 1844. The agree which will the deeple falt by every Salilier and Sipahee in India, at the received Lord Elienberteigh, will receive some alleviation in the entisfaction the Linian Army must feel at the expense and of "a soldier good and true" to the office at Universe General. We, in common with men of all profittings and parties, approve of the selection of Sir Henry In Mingray to monest Lord Ellenborough. He has long been improve to the world as one of our most chivalrence light in hadder infilters—trained and tried in war—and not universities in the affairs of tests at home and abroads.

State at home and abroad. The appointment cannot for to here struck our readers as indicative of a shi to of measures—that Sir Heary Last only publicly allied in politics to his Lordship, he is his grivate whead, sian of the Heavy havand brother-in-law. The pelicition of dir Henry hav-ing been made, as we have witten to believe, by the Duke of Wellington, and Ba Green having seconds's Duke of Wellington, and Ellenterprogrammer or the policy, it is natural consisted that the Duke would not recommend and off whose policy he had being at variance with thet which his Grace when the policy he had been policy by the policy he had been policy by the being at variance with the which his Grace when the policy he had been policy by the policy he had been policy by the policy he had been policy by the policy he had been policy by the policy he had been policy by the policy he had been policy by the policy he had been policy by the policy he had been policy by the policy he had been policy by the policy he had been policy by the policy he had been policy by the policy by would not recommended that that waren and doubts, as being at variance with that waren and doubts, as being at variance with the Lord Elizaborough, This and doubts, as being at variance probably had suggested himself to Lord Elicanorous, and which His Lordship a ship essented. This, and information which has resolved us, incline and the real and which this Lorenzap some private information which has reached us, incline us to think that the public use. Hitle aware of the real causes which induced the Court of Directors to exercise their extreme power. It was not altogether on Indian affairs, nor on public matter; that the Court decided on the recall of Lord Ellenborough We believe that the nominerecall of Lord Elienborough Wa hallow that the nomina-tion of Sir Henry Harding was most readily sequicised in by the Court of Directors and shall be proceeds to India with the confidence of the Emistry and Directory.

It must be in the recollection of our readers, that Sir

ry, when Secretary for Ireland, won golden opinions as an able, seeiduous, and imparital Minister of the Crown; and in his former and his late administration of Secretaryat-War, he has proved himse if one of the most efficient er-war, no mas proven almonir o public corvante of light Majeriy.

As Military Journalists, we present coult to congratulate a Army—capacially the Indian Army—on this appointenot omit to contratuists ment; for Sir Henry will carry with him a ripe experience in ment; for Sir Henry will early with him a ripe experience in war, a wide happinedge of all that regards soldiers in war, and peace, and a finantist shift in Military details, which wast beneficially determine many matters ill understood by the best-informed divides. It would have been a highly-prized honour by the Amy of the East India Company and Sir Henry Passings been appointed Governor-General of India; but as obsticles existed in various ways to his nomination—the which of which was Sir Henry's resignation on the ground of ill-health, and there being no certainty of his being able to proceed at once to his Government—the salection of Sir Henry Hardings cannot be too highly commanded.

It is some antisfaction to the British Army cannot live.

It is some estisfaction to be British Army generally, that in losing an excellent Brotary-at-War, his services are preserved for the beauty of that portion of it which serves in India. We feel now confident that many anoma-lies in the finence departments of Her Majesty's and of the Company's Forest Will be removed under the administration of the new Governor General, and that many of those petty and Indicating Riginations between the Eu-those petty and Irritating Aldinetions between the European and Native Transpherii be for over abolished.

Sir Henry Hardings will law the War-Office regretted by all under him; and we may safely assert, that as the Army in India-Baropaga, and Native-will lament the recall of Lord Ellenborough, the removal from the Scoretaryat-War's office of Bir Hipsry Cardings will be as sincerely felt by all British soldiers or all ranks, as a great public lose, and as depriving them if a protector of their just rights and interests, against the tendency that exists, from false notions of acomomy, is impair the efficiency of the large by a further radiophen of its imadequate numbers.

A VACANOT having taken pince for an Indi ander of a District in the Coast Guard Signice, through the ratirement of Commander Joseph Cammillari, R.N., we shall hope to be able to appeared the selection of a suspensor in the person of one of the Officers who are still without employment, and who have received pro tion from that Service, at the recommendation of the Board of Customs. On referring to the Navy List, we observe the names of the three Commanders promoted in January, 1842, from the Coust Guard, all of whom are on the half-pay list; sind we observe that the three Commandate premitted last January era sign unemployed. Allinous we would not such to degrive His Lordship of toe lating a proportion of the grivals patrousge of these appointments, which must be the case, if we suggested that these appointments, or lating should receive the carliest attention, or, in shirt words, if we recommend that they change in provided him in the first his vacancies that might take place; will we think that a due, propertion may very justify he sentered for them; and that the profesence, in every declarational he shown to a dae, properges may very lawy and that the profession in every deck the and Officer who has on each pair light, projected by the special choice of the Department cander whose he surveil; and with respect to the beinging talless their claims are gastered to go into errosis. Lillip, 18th Royal Irish, and Assistant-Silipson Traquair, Bith Regiment, Some of those poor follows were saily bleeppinisted at not having receiped the promised China Blodal, before leaving the sountry in which they endured to much. A great deal has been said of the bloodless nature of the China war, but when we reflect upon the invital mertality which has prevalled amongst the soldiery—the aspirate deated lemas satisfied in mon—not upon the exciting battle field, it is true, but in the feall shed, or jamit-up hospital infig. when, moreover, we consider that a mader of regret that the gratifying distinction should not have been already emplied. However salls may be disposed to undervalue a decoration which, sherraskedly speaking, perhaps, should never have been awarded for quinpaigus where so little real fighting took place, yet the addition on the same way, and we think it therefore more than acqueable, that the broken-down veteram, in cultimating his sarvices, should include his enferings,—whether by peetlience, privation, or the eword.

contingent, with the recent augmentation of from 10,000 to 12,000 men by the addition of an extra company to each of the regiments of the Bengal and Bombay Army, and the creation of a new regiment of irregular Cavalry, has tended greatly to aggravate the evil of a deficiency of European Officers, of which Sir C. Napler so heavily

Scinds.—At Sukkur the force amounted to 1892, of whom 146 were sick; at Shikarpore there were 1015 men, of whom 54 only were in hospital in the beginning of the month. The 9th and 65th N.I. were about to proceed for Ferosepore, when the refusal of the Bengal Regiments to march for Scinde disturbed the arrangements of the whole of the troops on the Indus. At Hydershad there are at present 4027 men, of whom 467 are in hospital. The 12th N.I. had been removed from the fort to make way for the women and sick of H.M.'s 86th, which make way for the women and sick of the state of the arrived on 19th March; the right wing was expected on the 21st. Reviews of the troops were at this date in progress. Sir C. Napier had been on a journey on the Hubb river; he was about to proceed up the country. At a dinner given to him on the anniversary of the victory of Meeapoe, he had expressed himself in terms of tory of Mosance, he had expressed himself in terms of censure sgainst the press of India. The appointment of Mr. Raikes, an unpassed Ensign of three years standing, to the Scinde Irregular Horse, seems to be viewed as rather a rankish job by the Army. The troops quartered in Scinde amounted in the beginning of the month, to 14,358; those in Cutch, close by, to 1894; and about one-tenth only are at present on the sick list. Colonel Squird; of H.M.'s 13th, has been superseded by General Simpson in his command at Sakkur, in cohecquence, it is said, of having sent in a strong remonstrance to General Napier on the weakness of his brigade, giving warning that unless it was augmented in time a second Cabul tragedy less it was augmented in time a accound Cabul tragedy might be the result. On the 9th Sept., 1843, the Go-vernor-General intimated that the charge of Scinds would be transferred from the Bombay to the Bengal Army. No amall sensation was occasioned by this aunouncement the Bombay troops considered, that as Soinde had by them been captured, by them it should be kept. It seemed singular that a country within three days' sail of the pert of Bombay should be garrisoned by troops whose supplies from their own head-quarters would take three months to reach them, and who were to have their depots for home recruits, their hospitals and sanatorium, at another presidency. But so it was decreed; in this case, "the king had said sail, but the winds said nay." The disturbances in the Punjanb, and threatened troubles in Gwaller, caused the Hengal troops to be arrested on their merch; and though assured by Sir C. Napier in Nov. that they would be in their own Presidency in a month, the conquering Army continued to be detained near the scene of their victories. The following are the terms of

"With the concurrence of the Right Hon, the Governor General of India in Council, the Chambonder-in-Chief is please to direct the following corps to be high in readiness to procee from their respective cantomannisto Beinde, to relieve the troop of the Bombay Presidency, at present serving in that province Routes will be supplied without delay from the office of the Garrer-Manter-Cleneral of the Army, and dates of movemen hereafter specified.

having delayed the execution of the arrangements gazetted so far back as the 9th of September, the Bengal troops were at length ordered to move. The 64th, on bel directed to proceed from Leodianah, refused flut to stir. extra allowances such as are usually given on foreign Service should be granted to them; it was found inconvenient to contest the point, so Government gave in, and the destination of the Regiment was altered from Scinde to Benares. Luckily, however, the recusests volunteered to take the station originally easigned to them, and are now on their way to Sukkur, having not only obtained all they asked, but promised relief within the year in case of sickness. It was hoped that the matter might blow over, and that a better spirit would quiskly make its appear-ance amongst the troops. Instead of this the disaffection spread, and the 7th Cavalry, the 4th, 34th, and 69th, with a company of Artillery, each in turn, followed the evil example which had been set them. This was alarming enough, and as all the regiments which had been ordered had refused to move, there was reason to apprehend that dis-obedience would become general. The rumours speedily reached our enemies on the further bank of the Sutley Some of the mutineer Sepays are alleged to have placed communication with the Seikhs, who believed disaffection universal throughout the Army. discontent was too extensively diffused, and too obviously attributable to the measures of Government itself, to admit of being put down or punished by the strong hand of authority. The 7th Cavalry and 34th N.I. have, it is said, authority been threatened with dismissal, the others may probably secape; indeed it seems doubtful if even those just named will be punished. As a contrast to this, the whole Bun-delkund Legion, Cavarry, Artillery, and all, volunteered to proceed to Scinde unconditionally. The matter stands thus with the Bombay Sepoys, whose case is most familiar to us; but that, we believe, of the Bengal soldiers is pre-The pay of a Native soldier, inclu disely analogous. cisely analogous. The pay of a Native soldier, incoming half batta, or subsistence, is from 7 (14s.) to 9 (18s.) respects a month, varying betwint the two according to the period of his service. In India no allowance whatever is made beyond the net pay, including in this, as just estated, two-and-a-half of batta; but on foreign stations, the soldier has extra allowance of from 12 to 23 reposs (i. s. from 3s. to 5s.) a month, as betta, as it is called, and 3 rupess  $(G_{\theta})$  in name of rations which being about the price at which Government could provision the men from the which Government could provision the men from the Commissariat. In Science, which till last year was considered a foreign country, both these allowences were success a toronga country, nota these showeness were made. The money rations, however, equivalent to marrly eng-half of their pay, were withdrawn during the years 1849 and 1841, when the troops were in offittenments, and no enemy was in the field; they were once more granted in January, 1842, when extensive morements became necessary, and were again withdrawn on let July, 1843, when t country became quiet, and the troops retired to quarters. By the Bombay troops this was submitted to without a murmur, though the retreachment of three rupees a month, equivalent to between que-half and one-third of his pay, was a virtual infringement of the tarms of his enlistment, by which they bound themissives to serve in Hindostan on certain terms only, Government binding itself to grant additional allowances in the event of their being required for foreign service. The Repoy will much anywhere, and against any enemy, if faith in money matters be kept with him; but there is no man more tenacious than the native of India of his pecuniary claims on his employer. But he could not be made to comprehend how a country which he had always regarded as foreign to Hindostan should be commuted into a part of it by proclamation, nor see why, if Government chose in this instance to make him serve on the Indus on the terms for which he had enlisted for service at home, they might not equally insist on his campaigning on the Nils or Onts, or marching to Bokbara as well as Hyderabad, on home allowances. It was the affine to him whether it was in the hands of the Ameers or those of the India Company, in long as in matters of distance, danger, and expensive diving, it was essentially the same as danger, and expensive everys, it was essentially the same as formerly, and as different in all respects as possible from Hindostan. By order of 12th March, Government directed that the Sepoys serving in Science should draw, while in contonments, the same allowances as were made In India, only when troops were in the field; and that the lines wherein they resided should be constructed by Government, and not, as in India, at the charge of the Sepoy. This was nearly all that was desired; it was, it is true, a concession to clamour, and not to justice; but still, it was a proper and timely one, and if Government had erred, it was infinitely better to acknowledge and undo the mistake than to persist in error. The permanent cost of the extra allowances now granted to the Army will amount to about 50,000L a-year. The donation of six months' batta to all the troops near Hyderabad-7000 in number-and of six months' butts to those ongaged near Gwalfor-amounting to about 25,000well as to the whole of the men-about 28,000-who had been in Schoo, for however short a space, or however occupied, betwizt February 28, 1843, and February 28, 1844; the victors of Mecanes and Dubba coming in for both gratuities awarded by the general order, is generally believed to have been made with a view of encouraging the reluctant froops to proceed on their march, by holding out the hope of the bounty of Government to those who chose willingly to serve in Scinde. The order is in several particulars remarkable. It was issued on the evening of the day of the Governor-General's return to Calcutta-on the second augiversary of his strival in Indis...the, red-letter day ever to be held in gemembrance by the Army, when the 17th Feb. and the 24th 2darch, on which Meannes and Dubba were fought, have been forgotten. The donation will amount in all to betwize 280,000/, and 300,000/. It is alieged to have been given in consequence of the wight of information as to the distribution of the prize property taken at Hyderabad; and should it have already been determined that this is, according to custom, to be saide ever to its captors, the Army commanded by Gen. Napler this time last year, will be one of the most liberally required that ever tought. There were 17,000 men in Scinde at the time of the battles, and during the sickly season, Seven regiments have since been sent thither, and are included in the order for the donation. The 3d Cavalry having been a week, and a wing of the 14th N.1. of his Wrival in India-the red-letter day ever to be beli Cavalry having been a week, and a wing of the 14th N.1. twenty-four hours in the country, will be equally rewarded with those who have been there since 1838. We noticed in our last the organization of an additional regiment of Irregular Cavalry, and on the 12th of February, it was intimated that 100 men would be added to each of the regiments of the Bengai and Bombey Army, which had been included in the reduction of Jan., 1843, which directed a similar number to by struck off. The former Army contains seventy-four regiments of Native Infantry, the latter twenty-six; and the number of regiments excepted amount to eleven. Eight thousand infantry, with an entire regiment of Cavalry, dre found necessary, therefore, to be added to our Army in consequence of, as it is declared, the exigencies of Sqinde. Sir C. Napler, on 18th Feb., 1843, loudly preclaimed the peril in which the British Army was placed in the field of Meennee, for a want of sufficiency of British Officers, and recommended in the strongest manner that fals defect should be remedied with the least possible dainy. The justice and wisdom of the complaint was admitted in all quarters—and it was at-symbers solvanwedged that, from a pitiful paralmony in the pay of Officers, we were running the risk of destroying our Native regiments altogether. The mode mony is the pay of Officers, we were running the risk of destroying our Native regiments altogether. The mode in which the recommendation of the Governor of Scinde has been seconded by the Governor-General, is singular; an addition of from 9000 to 11,000 is made to the Army without a single additional Officer to command them, whilst forty-eight Officers are withouting from the line for the Gwalior contingent, numbering somewhere about 7000 or 8000 men. The two are equivalent to a reduction of about 100 Officers in the Bengul and Bombay Armies, just at a time when an addition of about double this number was declared by the highest Military authority indispensable. The object of these measures is apparent. If it cannot be shown that our wars are just, or our conit cannot be shown that our were are just, or our conqueets legitimate, they must be made to seem as little ax-pensive as possible; finding an augmentation of the Army indispensable, we increase the muster-roll of the men without adding to the number of their Officers—and this, too, with Native troops valuable for field-service only, when led by a sufficiency of Europeans.

Lahors.—Heera Singh is still at the head of affairs, and is doing all in his power to improve his position by sulisting men of his own class and caste from the hills, and also at Labore, with the view, it is strongly surmised, of supplanting the Sikh troops in the charge of the capital, for which purpose he is further doing all he can to get the Sikh soldiers away from Lahore, many being detached to Peshawar, where the movements of Mahommed Ukhbar Khan are causing him great unessiness, and others to the various stations on the Sutlej, especially to Phuloor, opposite Loodhesansh, and Kussoor, opposite Ferozepore. It is, however, with some difficulty he has succeeded in carrying out these suds, as the troops continue excessively refractory, and absent themselves whenever they think proper.

The following letter, received by the last Overland Mail, is by a person possessing the fullest information upon the subject :--

"I days say the came of the refusal of some regiments to go to ficind will be strangely misrepresented in England, as it has been here, very much at first, because the whole subject was misunderstood.

'When the Army first crossed the Indus, Lord Auckland gave the trodge ultra-Indus silowances, similar to those given in 1834 to troops beyond the Barrampouter. These consisted in full batta (which is the ordinary field allowances), and, in addition to that, what are called 'money rations,'—that is, rations, or their equivalent in money; the Soppy being bound ordinarily to provide his own rations out of his pay. These allowances were given to troops moving into an seneny's country where to find any provisions was difficult. From the 1st of January, 184e, to the Sist of December, 1841, these allowances were, as regarded the troops in Scinde below the Ghants, withdrawn,—that is, the 'money rations' were; the full batta, which is a field allowance, was still given in cantosments. This was done because the troops in Beinde were no longer in the presence of an enemy, and coald provision themselves at a reasonable cost.

'In Jana, 1843, when the troops in Upper Roinde were again put in motion howards Candahar, and the same state of things existed which stated when the sattr' money rations' allowance was first grasted. Lord Elicaborough restored it, and retrospectively to the 1st January, 1841, when this state of things began. Then, on the 38th of Blay, leat year, when there was no longer any assume in the field, when no movements were to take place, he signly withdraw it, as Lord Anckland had done under the ame chromathicases, but prospectively from the 1st of July. The Bombay troops were from that date without these extra allowances, and make no complaint. In face, from the 1st of July.
